

---

Acknowledgements

---

It has been a pleasure to collaborate with Ron on another book and a particular delight to work with Stacy and Lynda, two of my new colleagues at Simmons. Many thanks to all of our contributors across the globe, from the big names in the field to the newly invited doctoral graduates. Between them they have generously shared their latest, cutting edge research studies with us and, in so doing, advanced the field. This book would not have been possible without the support of Alison Southgate, who has been the nerve centre, managing all the communications between the editorial team, the contributors and the publishers. Huge thanks to her and Jean Hutton, who assisted her at Cranfield.

As ever, thanks goes to my husband John who is my greatest supporter and to my children Rebecca, Jade, Bruno, Alex and Daniel who I hope will understand the nature of women's careers far better than I did at their ages!

Susan Vinnicombe, OBE, *Cranfield School of Management, Cranfield University, UK

This volume continues my efforts to better understand the experiences of women and men in managerial and professional jobs and to support them in their aspirations. We are slowly but surely making progress.

I thank our international contributors.

It was a joy to collaborate with Susan, Stacy and Lynda.

Alison provided outstanding administrative support at Cranfield in her contacts with contributors and our publishers, Edward Elgar. We especially acknowledge Fran O'Sullivan for her efforts on our behalf.

I thank the following for working with me on women in management projects: Tamara Weir, Carol McKeen, Mary Mattis and Debra Nelson.

My contributions were supported in part by York University.

May the women, and men, in my life benefit from this work.

Ronald J. Burke, *Schulich School of Business, York University, Toronto, Canada

This volume represents an invaluable opportunity to expand the conversation on women's careers to a global stage. It was truly a pleasure to take this journey with the exceptional group of contributors who shared their theories, frameworks and ideas with us. I would also like to express my gratitude to my co-editors, Ron, Lynda and Sue, and to Alison, our administrative champion at Cranfield. Finally, I offer my thanks to my partner in life, Vince Beard. I can't express how much I appreciated his patience and support, as I read and edited chapter drafts and held phone conferences with authors and co-editors. I look forward to this book being a resource for others who are interested in learning about and gaining access to international perspectives on women's careers.

Stacy Blake-Beard, Simmons School of Management, Simmons College,
Boston, MA, USA

It has been a pleasure to work with my colleagues as editors and contributors to this important global research on women's careers. It is my most sincere hope that it stimulates further interest in advancing knowledge and improving organizational practice to promote women into leadership for a more just and sustainable future for us all.

I would like to acknowledge the wonderful support of Alison Southgate at Cranfield, and the love and support of my husband Marty and my children Juliet and Alex. And finally I would like to express appreciation for my students who recognize the importance and value of this work.

Lynda L. Moore, Simmons School of Management, Simmons College,
Boston, MA, USA

