

Acknowledgements

This volume is a publication of the Centre for European Studies (CES) at Carleton University in Ottawa, Canada. The Centre is grateful for financial support from Carleton University and from the European Union, the latter based on a grant to CES, which was designated an EU Centre of Excellence by the European Commission in 2006.

We also acknowledge support from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council (SSHRC) of Canada for funding the research that formed the basis of some of the chapters in this volume.

We are particularly grateful to our copy editor, Jane Freeland. We thank all of the authors for the collective effort that went into producing a coherent approach and for their attention to our suggestions, requests and inquiries.

Of course, this publication reflects the views of the authors for each chapter; none of the sponsoring organizations is responsible for the content, and the contents of this publication can in no way be taken to reflect the views of the European Union.
