Acknowledgements

A book project like this represents, and requires, the work of many participants. We particularly thank the individual chapter authors who contributed to this Handbook: Lauren Andres, Uday Apte, Caroline Chapain, Alex Coad, Faridah Djellal, Michael Ehret, Julian Frankish, Faiz Gallouj, Royston Greenwood, C. Michael Hall, Steve Hollis, Andrew Jones, Uday Karmarkar, Cheryl Kieliszewski, Paul P. Maglio, Robert Mason, Tim Morris, Hiranya Nath, Mary O'Mahony, Andrew Potter, Joanne Roberts, Richard Roberts, Luis Rubalcaba, Michael Smets, David Storey, Patrik Ström, Jon Sundbo, David Teece, Marja Toivonen, Rodoula Tsiotsou, Jochen Wirtz, Fiona Yang and Anthony Yeh. We appreciate their time, patience, expertise and commitment to the broader project of understanding service business and the global economy and the contribution services make to economic development and innovation.

Producing an edited collection is a partnership between many different individuals – the editors, chapter authors and their families, but also those service firms and employees who were willing to allow academics access and provided the empirical evidence that made many of the chapters in this Handbook possible. We should also not forget all the policy-makers who have given their time to discuss services. Finally, we appreciate the work of our editor at Edward Elgar, Matthew Pitman, for encouraging us and seeing the project through to completion.

John R. Bryson and Peter W. Daniels
July 2014
Birmingham