

Acknowledgements

---

The editors would like to thank the Suntory and Toyota International Centres for Economics and Related Disciplines (STICERD) at the London School of Economics (LSE) for funding the one-day workshop which was held on 23 March 2011. Others present at that workshop, whose participation and contribution was much appreciated, were: Faiza Chaudary, Professor Nicholas Deakin, Professor Bernard Harris, Daniel Stevens, Karen Weisblatt and Kate Spieglehalter. STICERD also co-funded a panel debate titled 'Big Society and Social Policy in Britain', which was held at the LSE on 27 January 2011 and which itself inspired the workshop. The panel debate was also supported by funds from the LSE Department of Social Policy and for that we are grateful to Professor Tim Newburn, Convenor, for his support and encouragement. Further information and a podcast of the panel debate is available on the LSE website <http://www2.lse.ac.uk/socialPolicy/newsandevents/Home.aspx>

We would additionally like to thank Professor Pat Thane, and Fiona Holland and Douglas Dowell of the Public Affairs Office of History and Policy at The Institute of Contemporary British History, King's College London, for their roles in supporting the 23 March workshop and in convening workshops at the Cabinet Office Strategy Unit on 15 June 2010 on civic society and at the Office for Civil Society on 28 February 2011 on local government, at which several of the contributions from the historians in this volume were first presented.

We are particularly grateful to Maria Schlegel, Programme Administrator at the LSE Department of Social Policy, for her support in organising the initial public lecture and seminar as well as for her overall project management duties, which included liaising with contributors, formatting the manuscript, etc. She has done a wonderful job and for that we would like to express our great thanks and gratitude.

We would also like to thank Dr Hakan Seckinelgin for his work on the book. Hakan was initially one of the editors of the volume but withdrew mid-way through the project for personal reasons. We missed his input in the later stages of the project, but were grateful to benefit from his participation at the beginning. We would like to extend this thanks also to the other participants at both the LSE and H&P organised workshops in 2010 and 2011, whose contributions at those workshops assisted with the discussions leading to this book. Finally, thanks to Hilary Cooper for providing editorial advice on the last draft of the editors' Introduction.