

Acknowledgments

We would like to acknowledge the many colleagues who supported us during the writing of this book. We would like to thank the members of Chapman University's Faculty Personnel Council for granting each of us a sabbatical to work on this book; Dr Arthur Kraft, then Dean of the Argyros School of Business and Economics who supported our sabbatical requests; and Dean Reginald Gilyard, who generously supported our work and provided us with the time to focus on our writing. We would like to thank Jillian Ryan Wood, Rita Desjardins and Craig Williams of the Argyros School of Business and Economics for literally running to help us each time we had a crisis. They saved us hours of frustration. We would like to thank Jaclyn Witt for her conscientious work as the editorial assistant for the Journal of Business and Management as well as her hard work on this book. Jackie has formatted more references for us than anyone should ever have to in their lifetime. Jackie responded to our requests for help with timeliness, grace and professionalism. We would like to acknowledge the unwavering support of the late Dr Barbara Mulch, Vice Provost and Dean of Graduate Studies. Barbara briefly served as our Dean during difficult times, and through it all was our friend and champion.

The idea for this book arose out of an Academy of Management symposium we organized on Extreme Leaders and Teams. We appreciate the many management scholars who shared their interest in extreme leadership with us and who were willing to make an idea for a book on extreme leadership become a reality. We are indebted to our contributors. Your research on extreme leadership and the stories you shared in this book validated and shaped our definition of extreme leadership. Thank you for your patience with us, for the many revisions, and for putting our deadlines ahead of your own.

We would like to acknowledge the victims of Sandy Hook Elementary School. As was the rest of the country, we were shocked and shaken by this tragic event. We hope that our research on the leadership lessons learned from Newtown may contribute in a small way to preventing these types of tragedies. Writing this book reminded us why we try to teach our management students that, of all the resources their company has, they are entrusted with the most important.

Finally, neither of us could have written this book alone. We are fortunate to be friends as well as colleagues. This bond makes it a pleasure to write together even when the subject is heartbreaking.

Cristina M. Giannantonio
Amy E. Hurley-Hanson