
Contributors

Carina Abrahamson Löfström is a Researcher at the Gothenburg Region Association of Local Authorities, Sweden, and has a PhD in business administration from the University of Gothenburg. Her research interests are learning and change in public sector organizations, and she has published several books and reports.

Aini Ahmad is a Senior Lecturer in the Centre for Modern Languages and Human Sciences at Universiti Malaysia Pahang. She earned her PhD in Management Learning from Lancaster University, UK. Her research interests are Islamic management, learning organization, knowledge management and soft skills.

Muhammad Babur is a leadership and management consultant, and co-founder of Exploring Leadership and Learning Theories in Asia (ELLTA). His professional interests are rooted in bringing out contextual and cultural meanings in the areas of organizational learning, leadership and learning, strategic planning, social media and social research. His work has been published nationally and internationally.

Yehuda Baruch is Professor of Management and Associate Dean Research, Rouen Business School, France. He has held positions at the University of East Anglia (UEA), University of Texas at Arlington (UTA), University of Canterbury and London Business School, and has published extensively in the areas of global and strategic human resources management (HRM) and careers, with over 200 publications. He is a former Editor of Group and Organization Management and CDI, and former Chair, Careers Division, Academy of Management.

Naomi Birdthistle completed her PhD on family business with a particular focus on how the learning organization can be applied to it. In 2006 it won the Family Firm Institute (FFI) Award for best Doctoral dissertation. Naomi is a lecturer in entrepreneurship and family business at the University of Limerick, Ireland.

Deborah Ann Blackman is a Professor of Human Resources Management in the Faculty of Business, Government and Law at the University of Canberra, Australia. Her research focuses upon the role of knowledge and knowledge transfer in developing organizational effectiveness in a range of contexts.

Chris Blatern, MA, is a scholar and organizational learning consultant specializing in participative approaches (including the use of digital media) through the application of relational theory and practice. Chris is an Associate of the Taos Institute, USA, and has authored several works in these related fields.

Pavel Bogolyubov is a Management and Business Development Fellow at Lancaster University Management School, UK. His research concentrates on the anthropology of Enterprise 2.0 and related matters, including the influence of national cultures on knowledge management, organizational learning and learning organization.

Tom Boydell, PhD BscTech, is a professional consultant, writer, academic, actor and amateur tapestry weaver.

Hong T.M. Bui PhD is a lecturer in Organizational Behavior/Human Resource Management in the School of Management, Southampton University. She is interested in interdisciplinary research in learning organization, systems thinking, social responsibility, and leadership. She has had articles published in Management Learning, International Journal of Human Resource Management, and Group and Organization Management.

John Burgoyne is Professor of Management Learning in the Department of Management Learning in the Management School, University of Lancaster, UK, of which he is a founding member. He is a Visiting Professor at University Campus Suffolk and an Associate of Ashridge Management College and Henley Business School, UK.

Xiaoying Cong is an undergraduate student at Nottingham University Business School (NUBS), China.

David Joaquín Delgado-Hernández graduated from the Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México (as a civil engineer with a Masters degree in systems engineering). He was awarded a PhD degree from the University of Birmingham, UK. Currently he is a full-time lecturer at the Universidad Autónoma del Estado de México.

Maya Drobnjak is the lead social scientist at the Defence Science and Technology Organisation, Australia. She has conducted research for two decades for the Australian military, with expertise in the following areas: organizational change, design, learning, leadership and culture. Maya has recently returned from a short deployment to Afghanistan investigating cultural issues.

Mark Easterby-Smith is Professor of Management Learning at Lancaster University Management School, UK and a former President of the British Academy of Management. He has published extensively on management research methodology, organizational learning, and dynamic capabilities, including the Handbook of Organizational Learning and Knowledge Management (Wiley, 2011).

Ziyun Fan is an undergraduate student at Nottingham University Business School (NUBS), China.

Cathrine Filstad is Professor in Organizational Behaviour and Leadership at BI Norwegian Business School. She holds a PhD in Organizational Learning and Knowledge from Aarhus School of Business, Denmark. She has undertaken substantial research, and has published articles in scientific publications and five books on organizational learning, leadership, knowledge capabilities and change at work.

Thomas N. Garavan specializes in both the research and teaching of human resource development, leadership development and vocational training and education, at the University of Limerick, Ireland. He has authored or co-authored 14 books and 100 refereed journal papers and book chapters.

Petter Gottschalk is Professor of Information Systems and Knowledge Management in the Department of Leadership and Organizational Behaviour at BI Norwegian Business School. His research is focused on learning in law enforcement to detect and prosecute white-collar criminals. Dr Gottschalk has been Managing Director of several companies.

Jacky F.L. Hong is an Associate Professor at the University of Macau. He received his PhD from Lancaster University, UK. His research interests fall into the areas of organizational learning, knowledge management in multinational firms and transfer of Japanese management techniques.

Shih-wei Hsu teaches at the University of Nottingham Ningbo, China. He sees organization as a site of social control and repression. His previous research interests are in poststructuralism and knowledge management. Now he is interested in anarchism and different philosophical concepts of resistance and emancipation within and outside organizations.

Dima Jamali (PhD, University of Kent at Canterbury, UK) is Professor at the American University of Beirut, Lebanon. Her research has appeared in reputable journals including British Journal of Management, Corporate Governance: An International Review, Journal of Business Ethics and Business Ethics Quarterly.

Boying Li is an undergraduate student at Nottingham University Business School (NUBS), China.

Ziyan Li is an undergraduate student at Nottingham University Business School (NUBS), China.

Mian Lin is a lecturer at the Jiangmen Polytechnic in the Guangdong province, People's Republic of China. She received her MBA from the University of Macau.

Charissa Lloyd is an MBA student at the American University of Beirut, Lebanon. She is Principal of Access International School in Lebanon.

Denise McDowall works within the human sciences discipline of land operations division. Her current area of interest and the focus of her studies is in the field of knowledge management and related organizational issues. Denise has a Masters in Knowledge Management from the University of Canberra, Australia.

Anders Örtenblad is Associate Professor in Organizational Behavior and Director of Teaching Development at Nottingham University Business School (NUBS), China. He is associate editor of International Journal of Management Reviews (Wiley-Blackwell) and member of the editorial boards of Management Learning and The Learning Organization.

Chenghao Peng is an undergraduate student at Nottingham University Business School (NUBS), China.

Yusuf Sidani (PhD, University of Mississippi, USA) is an Associate Professor at the American University of Beirut, Lebanon. His research interests include business ethics and cross-cultural leadership and management behaviour. His research has appeared in the Journal of Social Psychology, Learning Organization, Journal of Business Ethics and Business Ethics Quarterly.

Robin Stanley Snell is Professor of Management and Director of Business Programmes at Lingnan University, Hong Kong. He has published in many journals, including the Journal of Management Studies and Organization Studies. His research interests include organizational learning, business ethics and qualitative methods.

Christina Stothard is a social scientist at the Defence Science and Technology Organisation, Australia. She has a BA (Hons) in Psychology from the University of Adelaide. She has been with DSTO for 15 years and has conducted applied research for the Army, using various methodologies, including social network analysis and structural equation modelling.

Steven Talbot works within the human science discipline in the domains of social and organizational learning. Whilst at the Defence Science and Technology Organisation, Australia, he has examined issues relating to learning organizations, social and organizational learning, lesson capture and dissemination. Steven has a PhD in Sociology from Flinders University of South Australia.

Made Torokoff-Engelbrecht has a PhD (in Economics) from the University of Tartu, Estonia. She is an Associate Professor of Entrepreneurship Education at the University of Tartu. Her main research areas are organizational learning and organizational values and she is responsible for courses in business ethics, organizational behaviour and management.

Karen E. Watkins is Professor of Human Resource and Organization Development at the University of Georgia, USA. Karen's scholarly interests include incidental learning, action science and organizational learning assessment. With Marsick, she developed and validated the Dimensions of the Learning Organization Questionnaire used in over 70 published studies.

David Weir is Head of the School of Business, Leadership and Enterprise at University Campus Suffolk, UK and Affiliate Professor at ESC Rennes, France. He researches intercultural dimensions of comparative management, and Diwan styles of decision-making in the Arab Middle East, careers of expatriates and international managers.

Jie Zhou is a research assistant at Nottingham University Business School (NUBS), China.