

Contributors

Luis L.M. Aguiar is Associate Professor of Sociology in the Ike Barber School of Arts and Sciences at the University of British Columbia. He edited (with Andrew Herod) The Dirty Work of Neoliberalism: Cleaners in the Global Economy (Blackwell 2006) and co-edited Researching amongst Elites: Challenges and Opportunities in Studying Up (Ashgate 2012).

Maria Joseli Barreto completed her bachelor's and master's degrees in Geography from the Universidade Estadual Paulista Julio de Mesquita Filho (UNESP), Presidente Prudente, São Paulo. She contributes to the Center for Labour Geography Studies and the Research Center for Labour, Environment and Health at UNESP.

Sébastien Chauvin is Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of Amsterdam and a researcher at the Amsterdam Institute for Social Science Research. His research has focused on labour, immigration and citizenship in the United States and France. In the US he adopted a participant observation research strategy focused on day labour and the undocumented migrant labour force.

Jacklyn Cock is Professor Emeritus in the Department of Sociology at the University of Witwatersrand, Johannesburg and is an honorary research professor in the Society, Work and Development Institute (SWOP). She has written extensively on militarization, gender and environmentalism in Southern Africa. Her best-known book is Maids and Madams: A Study in the Politics of Exploitation (Ravan Press 1981). Her latest book is The War against Ourselves: Nature, Power and Justice (Wits University Press 2007).

Brian Garvey is a Research Fellow at the University of Strathclyde's Business School investigating work, labour organization and primary commodity production in the context of global environmental change. He is co-founder of the Work, Labour and Globalisation research group at the University of Strathclyde.

Michael Gillan teaches and researches employment relations at the University of Western Australia. He has published in a wide range of national and international journals. His current research interests include: the role of global union federations in employment relations in India and Indonesia; labour in global production networks; labour movements in India; and employment relations in Myanmar.

Dilek Hattatoğlu is a feminist researcher and Associate Professor in Sociology at Muğla Sıtkı Koçman University, Turkey. She is also working with the home-based workers' movement in her country as a voluntary technical advisor. She has published articles dealing with gender, labour, poverty and methodology and co-edited Methodos Kuram ve Yöntem Kenarından (Anahtar Kitaplar Yayinevi 2009).

Andrew Herod is Distinguished Research Professor of Geography and Adjunct Professor of International Affairs and of Anthropology at the University of Georgia. He is the author of Scale (Routledge 2011), Geographies of Globalization: A Critical Introduction (Wiley-Blackwell 2009) and Labor Geographies: Workers and the Landscapes of Capitalism (Guilford Press 2001). He is also an elected official, serving as a member of the government of Athens-Clarke County, Georgia.

Lu Huilin is a Professor in the Sociology Department at Peking University. His research interests include rural China, migrant labour and social change. He publishes widely in mainland Chinese journals.

Katherine Joynt is a Ph.D. candidate in Sociology at the University of Witwatersrand, Johannesburg. She is a doctoral fellow of the International Center of Development and Decent Work (ICDD) at Kassel University and the Society, Work and Development Institute (SWOP) at the University of Witwatersrand.

Rob Lambert is Winthrop Professor of Employment Relations at the University of Western Australia's Business School. His publications include Grounding Globalization (Blackwell 2008), written with Edward Webster and Andries Bezuidenhout, for which the authors won the American Sociological Association's Labor and Labor Movements Section Distinguished Monograph Prize. His writing has focused on neoliberalism and the new labour internationalism.

Pun Ngai is a Professor in the Department of Applied Social Sciences at Hong Kong Polytechnic University. She is the author of Made in China: Women Factory Workers in a Global Workplace (Duke University Press 2005), which received the C.W. Mills Award and was translated into French, German, Italian, Polish and Chinese. She has also co-authored three books in Chinese on construction workers, Foxconn workers and China's social economy.

Jane Tate has worked on homeworking and women's labour rights for over 20 years, mainly as coordinator of Homeworkers Worldwide (HWW), a UK-based NGO supporting research and organizing amongst women homeworkers and other informal women workers. As coordinator of HWW, she has been responsible for programmes of action research with organizations of homeworkers.

Mark Thomas is Associate Professor of Sociology and Co-Director of the Global Labour Research Centre at York University, Toronto. His research interests include political economy and economic sociology, with a primary research focus on the regulation of labour standards at local, national and transnational scales. He is the author of Regulating Flexibility: The Political Economy of Employment Standards (McGill-Queen's University Press 2009).

Edward Webster is Professor Emeritus in the Society, Work and Development Institute (SWOP) at the University of Witwatersrand, Johannesburg and outgoing Director of the Chris Hani Institute, a trade union think tank. Amongst his publications are Grounding Globalization (Blackwell 2008), written with Rob Lambert and Andries Bezuidenhout, which won the American Sociological Association's Labor and Labor Movements Section Distinguished Monograph Prize. He is currently completing a manuscript on 'Labour after Globalisation'.

Aelim Yun is Teaching Professor of Labour and Social Security Law at the Korea National Open University, and her research programme centres on precarious workers and the labour movement. Her recent publications include 'Organizing Workers beyond an Employment Relationship: A Case of Independent Drivers in Road Freight Transport' in Sharit K. Bhowmik (ed.), The State of Labour: The Global Financial Crisis and Its Impact (Routledge 2014).

