
Contributors

ABOUT THE EDITOR

David A. Deese is Professor of Political Science at Boston College in Chestnut Hill, Massachusetts. He is the author, editor, or co-editor of eight books, including World Trade Politics: Power, Principles, and Leadership (Routledge, 2008) and Globalization: Causes and Effects (Ashgate, 2012). He was the series editor for 11 volumes in the Library of Essays in International Relations, 2005–12, by Ashgate Publishing. He teaches and publishes on the politics and institutions of international economic relations, including specifically the leadership of international bargaining and negotiations, the comparative political economy of trade policy reform, the international drivers of political economic reform in developing states, the international politics of energy markets, and the interaction of economics and security in US foreign policy. Currently he leads a research project on the most feasible policies to address global climate change in the context of political deadlock in key countries. He is the founding director of the leading interdisciplinary degree program at Boston College, the International Studies Program, and a senior member of the Arts and Sciences Promotion and Tenure Committee. He is on the national roster of US Fulbright Specialist Scholars, and has served as adviser to major public international organizations, national foundations and governments, US federal and state agencies, US universities, and various energy firms.

CONTRIBUTORS

Susan Ariel Aaronson is Research Professor of International Affairs at the Institute for International Economic Policy, the George Washington University's Elliott School of International Affairs. She also was recently the Minerva Chair at the National War College. Her research focuses on the Internet, trade, and human rights, trade and conflict, and corruption, trade, and good governance. She has recently received grants from the MacArthur Foundation, the Ford Foundation, the Swiss National Science Foundation and the Ford Motor Company for her work on Internet freedom and trade, corruption, and business and human rights. She serves on the Advisory Board for Business and Human Rights and is a Senior External Advisor to the Business and Society Team of Oxford Analytica. She has advised the UN Special Representative on Transnational Corporations and Human Rights and the Congressional Human Rights Caucus. She has consulted for the International Labour Organization, the World Bank, Free the Slaves, the Ford Foundation, the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative, the Stanley Foundation, several corporations, and the governments of Canada, Belgium, and the Netherlands, among others.

Mark Abdollahian focuses on designing and delivering advanced analytics for data-driven decision making. His global experience spans national policy, corporate strategy, economic development, finance, public–private partnerships, mergers and acquisitions, and business process reengineering. He creates, designs, and implements enterprise class data and strategy analytics used by the US government, the World Bank, and the United Nations, as well as private sector companies worldwide. He is currently Chief Executive Officer of ACERTAS and Clinical Professor at the School of Social Science, Policy and Evaluation at Claremont Graduate University. In addition to a bachelor degree from Case Western Reserve University, he holds an MA in foreign and defense policy and a PhD in political economy and mathematical modeling from Claremont Graduate University. He is author of dozens of articles and two books on data-driven strategy across business, politics, and economics.

Ari Afilalo is Professor of Law at Rutgers Law School, where he has taught since 2000. His areas of expertise include international trade, international investment, intellectual property, commercial and corporate law, international business transactions, European law, and public international law. He has published extensively on legal matters related to the GATT, NAFTA, and the European Union, including a co-authored book published by Cambridge University Press that explores the relationship between the structure of the international trading system and statecraft. He continues to work on the application of political theories of the state to international trade. He is a native of France and lived in Israel for several years before moving to the United States in 1986. He is fluent in French and Hebrew.

Greg Anderson is Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of Alberta. He is also a Fellow of, and Research Director for, the Alberta Institute for American Studies at the University of Alberta. He holds a BA in history from Brigham Young University, an MA in history from the University of Alberta, and his PhD from the Paul H. Nitze School of Advanced International Studies of the Johns Hopkins University (Johns Hopkins/SAIS) in Washington, DC. His research interests include Canadian–American relations, US foreign policy, and US foreign economic policy, with a particular emphasis on US trade policy and trade policy institutions. From 2000 to 2002, he also worked in the Office of the United States Trade Representative as a policy analyst in the NAFTA office.

Christopher Bliss is Emeritus Professor of Economics at the University of Oxford, UK, and a Fellow of Nuffield College, Oxford. Before his retirement he taught international economics and macroeconomics to Oxford graduate students. He has published on mathematical economics and development economics. His broad-ranging interests in development led him to intensive work in the 1970s with Nicholas Stern on the Palanpur village study in India, which remains highly influential. He has published five books and numerous journal papers, which are outlined on his homepage at the Nuffield College website.

Deborah Elms is Head, Temasek Foundation Centre for Trade and Negotiations (TFCTN), and Senior Fellow of International Political Economy at the S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies at Nanyang Technological University, Singapore. She is also a Senior Fellow in the Singapore Ministry of Trade and Industry's Trade Academy. Her research interests are negotiations and decision making, particularly in trade, with a current focus on the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) negotiations. She conducts a range of teaching and training for Asian government officials, for members of parliament, for business leaders, and for graduate students. She has consulted for the governments of the United Arab Emirates, Sri Lanka, Cambodia, Taiwan, and Singapore. She holds a PhD in political science from the University of Washington, an MA in international relations from the University of Southern California, and a BA and BS from Boston University.

Marc D. Froese is Associate Professor of Political Science and the founding director of the International Studies Program at Canadian University College in Alberta, Canada. His research examines the politics of international economic law within the context of North American economic integration. He is the author or co-author of a number of books and articles examining the juridical and institutional aspects of the global political economy of trade, including Canada at the WTO: Trade Litigation and the Future of Public Policy (University of Toronto Press, 2010). His current work focuses on the uneven development of dispute settlement mechanisms in regional trade agreements, and the impact of non-compliance on the legitimacy of trade courts. Many of his articles have been uploaded to the Social Science Research Network and may be accessed at <http://ssrn.com/author=887299>.

Maria Garcia is a senior lecturer at the University of Bath in the UK. She was previously a senior Marie Curie Fellow at the School of Politics and International Relations at the University of Nottingham in the UK, and the National Centre for Research on Europe, University of Canterbury in New Zealand. Her research focuses on the dynamics of trade and free trade agreements in the Asia Pacific region and European–Asian relations. Her publications have appeared in numerous academic journals, including the Journal of Common Market Studies and the Cambridge Review of International Affairs.

Kathleen J. Hancock, PhD, University of California, San Diego, is Associate Professor at the Colorado School of Mines, where she teaches in, and was the previous Director of, the Master of International Political Economy of Resources (MIPER) program. In her book Regional Integration: Choosing Plutocracy, she develops a theory on how powers such as South Africa and Russia economically integrate neighboring states. She has published in journals such as Foreign Policy Analysis, Asian Perspective, and China and Eurasia Forum Quarterly and is the author of book chapters on energy security and Eurasian economic integration. She was previously a Senior Analyst in the National Security and International Affairs Division at the US Government Accountability Office. She has conducted research in countries from Central Asia to Europe and Africa. Her current research analyzes regionalism and natural resources.

Randal R. Hendrickson is Director of Faculty Development at the Jack Miller Center. He has written on themes ranging from republicanism to evolutionary psychology in such publications as the Journal of Politics, Perspectives on Political Science, and the New Atlantis. Before joining the Jack Miller Center, he was a Fellow in the Gerst Program for Economic and Humane Studies at Duke University, where he taught political theory for two years. Prior to that, he was a Fellow at the Symposium of Science, Reason, and Modern Democracy at Michigan State University and a Bradley Fellow in the Department of Government at Harvard University.

Bernard Hoekman is Professor and Program Director, Global Economics, at the Robert Schuman Centre for Advanced Studies, European University Institute in Florence, Italy. He has held various senior positions at the World Bank, including Director of the International Trade Department and Research Manager in the Development Research Group. Prior to joining the World Bank he worked as an economist in the GATT Secretariat. He has published widely on trade policy and development, the global trading system, and trade in services. He is a graduate of the Erasmus University Rotterdam, holds a PhD in economics from the University of Michigan, and is a Research Fellow of the London-based Centre for Economic Policy Research and a Senior Associate of the Economic Research Forum for the Arab countries, Turkey, and Iran.

Wei Liang is Associate Professor in the School of International Policy and Management at the Monterey Institute of International Studies, USA. Her research interests include the international political economy of East Asia, Asian regionalism, international trade negotiation, and global governance. She is the co-author of China and East Asia's Post-Crisis Community: A Region in Flux (Lexington, 2012), co-editor of China and Global Trade Governance (Routledge, 2014), and author of several journal articles and book chapters. A graduate of Peking University, People's Republic of China, she received her PhD in international relations from the University of Southern California.

Mary Anne Madeira is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Queens College, City University of New York. Previously she was a Jean Monnet Fellow in the Global Economics research strand of the Global Governance Programme at the European University Institute. She received her PhD in political science from the University of Washington in 2013. She is the co-author, with James Caporaso, of Globalization, Institutions and Governance (Sage, 2011). Her research focuses on the domestic political and societal effects of global economic integration, particularly in the advanced industrialized economies. She also assesses the effects of regionalization on domestic social policies.

Rob Maxim is a Research Associate at the Council on Foreign Relations, where he focuses on competitiveness, immigration, and trade issues. He holds a BA in international affairs and economics, and an MA in international trade and investment policy, both from George Washington University. His research interests include international trade, US economic policy, and Internet policy and governance.

Christian May is Research Associate in International Political Economy at Goethe University Frankfurt am Main, Germany. His research focuses on the domestic and international aspects of emerging economies and the role of language and culture in the political economy. Besides publishing on large emerging economies and comparative capitalism, he is co-editor of Die großen Schwellenländer: Ursachen und Folgen ihres Aufstiegs in der Weltwirtschaft (2013, with Andreas Nölke and Simone Claar) and New Directions in Critical Comparative Capitalisms Research: Critical and Global Perspectives (Palgrave Macmillan, 2015, with Matthias Ebenau and Ian Bruff).

Erik Mitbrodt holds a JD from The Chinese University of Hong Kong as well as a BA from the University of Victoria. His interests combine anthropology and Latin American studies, and he researches the interaction between agricultural trade and economic development. He has broad-based experience of living and working in countries worldwide, including in many least developed countries.

Andreas Nölke is Professor of Political Science at Goethe University Frankfurt am Main, Germany. Within his field of international relations and international political economy he has published widely on topics such as financialization, transnational private self-regulation, the International Accounting Standards Board, and the nature of capitalism in emerging economies, in journals such as the Review of International Political Economy, World Politics, Competition and Change, the Review of African Political Economy, and the Journal of Common Market Studies. Currently, he is editing the volume Multinational Corporations from Emerging Markets: State Capitalism 3.0 (Palgrave Macmillan, forthcoming), as well as special issues on “Brazilian Multinational Corporations and the State” (for Critical Perspectives on International Business) and “The Domestic Sources of China’s Foreign Economic Policies” (for International Politics), both to be published in 2014.

Evgeny Postnikov is Lecturer in International Relations at the University of Glasgow. His research interests center on international political economy, particularly trade policy and its link with social issues, and European Union politics and external relations. He is especially interested in the rise of bilateralism in global trade and the role the EU and others play in it. He also researches the EU trade policy-making process through a comparative lens, contrasting it with that of the United States and other regional blocs. Prior to joining the University of Glasgow he completed his PhD in the Graduate School of Public and International Affairs, University of Pittsburgh, and was also educated in Germany and Russia.

John M. Rothgeb, Jr. is Professor of Political Science and Distinguished Scholar of the Graduate Faculty at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio. He is the author of numerous books and articles on international political economy, foreign policy, and the discipline of political science.

Elizabeth Smythe is a Professor of Political Science at Concordia University College in Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, where she teaches international and comparative politics. Her research interests include international trade and investment agreements and transnational social movements seeking to influence or resist these agreements. Her most recent research focuses on the global food system, international trade rules, especially standards around food labeling, and the influence of state and non-state actors on those rules.

Andrey Tomashevskiy is a PhD candidate at the University of California, Davis. His research interests focus on the impact of international trade and investment on domestic politics. More specifically, his current research examines the role of international investment for government stability in authoritarian regimes, the impact of financial flows on election outcomes in host countries, and the relationship between international investment and host nation corruption. He received his BA in political science from Kean University in 2006 and his MA from New York University in 2007.

Joel P. Trachtman is Professor of International Law at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy. Recent books include The Future of International Law: Global Government (Cambridge University Press, 2013), The International Law of Economic Migration: Toward the Fourth Freedom (Upjohn Institute, 2009), Ruling the World: Constitutionalism, International Law, and Global Governance (Cambridge University Press, 2009), Developing Countries in the WTO Legal System (Oxford University Press, 2009), and The Economic Structure of International Law (Harvard University Press, 2008). He has consulted for the United Nations, the OECD, Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation, the World Bank, the Organization of American States, and the US Agency for International Development. He has served as a member of the boards of the American Journal of International Law, the European Journal of International Law, the Journal of International Economic Law, the Cambridge Review of International Affairs, and the Singapore Yearbook of International Law. From 1998 to 2001, he was Academic Dean of the Fletcher School, and during 2000 and 2001 he served as Dean ad interim. He graduated in 1980 from Harvard Law School, where he served as editor in chief of the Harvard International Law Journal.

Silke Trommer is University Lecturer in Global Sustainable Development and World Politics at the University of Helsinki, Finland. She is associated with the Sir Walter Murdoch School of Public Policy and International Affairs in Perth, Australia, where she pursues a research project on the future of the World Trade Organization together with Ann Capling. She is author of Transformations in Trade Politics: Participatory Trade Politics in West Africa (Routledge, 2013). Her doctoral dissertation, on which the book is based, won the 2013 Best Dissertation Award from the International Political Economy Section of the International Studies Association. She has published articles on trade politics in New Political Economy, Globalizations, and the Journal of Development Studies, on trade law in the Chinese Journal of International Law, and on non-governmental organizations in West European Politics.

Gonzalo Villalta Puig is Professor of Law and Associate Dean (Development and External Affairs) of the Faculty of Law at The Chinese University of Hong Kong. He is a Barrister and Solicitor of the High Court of Australia and a Solicitor of the Senior Courts of England and Wales. A specialist in economic constitutional law, he researches the role of constitutional courts in the constitutionalization of free trade in federations and other non-unitary jurisdictions, mostly by a comparative approach. He has authored about 80 publications, mainly on matters of constitutional economics and legal issues of economic integration, including Economic Relations between Australia and the European Union: Law and Policy (Kluwer Law International, 2014), The High Court of Australia and Section 92 of the Australian Constitution (Lawbook Co., 2008), and Boundaries of Commercial and Trade Law (Sellier European Law Publishers, 2011, with Christian Twigg-Flesner). He is Convenor of the Research Group for Constitutional Studies of Free Trade and Political Economy of the International Association of Constitutional Law, a member of the Committee on International Trade Law of the International Law Association, and Associate Editor of the Global Journal of Comparative Law.

Zining Yang is a PhD candidate in political science in the School of Social Science, Policy and Evaluation at Claremont Graduate University. Her work focuses on the political economy of development, spanning environment and resource protection, diplomacy, and the political economy of Asian integration. She is also Research Associate at TransResearch Consortium, as well as a lecturer at La Sierra University and Claremont Graduate University. Her research interests include international political economy, conflict and integration, international relations in East Asia, computational economics, agent-based models, network analysis, and system dynamic models. She received her BA in international relations from Beijing International Studies University, and an MA in international studies from Claremont Graduate University in 2011.

Lyuba Zarsky is Associate Professor of International Environmental Policy and Business Administration at the Monterey Institute of International Studies in Monterey, California. She has written widely on the relationship between foreign investment and sustainability, including “Can Extractive Industries Promote Sustainable Development? A Net Benefits Framework and a Case Study of the Marlin Mine” (Journal of Environment and Development, June 2013, with Leonardo Stanley) and Enclave Economy: Foreign Investment and Sustainable Development in Mexico’s Silicon Valley (MIT Press, 2007, with Kevin Gallagher). She is a Senior Fellow at the Global Development and Environment Institute at Tufts University and holds a PhD in economics from the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.