When Olivier Moréteau was invited to act as Editor of the Comparative Legal History volume in the Research Handbooks in Comparative Law Series, he only accepted after having secured the cooperation of his friend Aniceto Masferrer, President of the European Society for Comparative Legal History. Both discussed the project with Kjell Å. Modéer who was invited to join the editorial team. In the process of initiating the book, editors and contributors were given the chance to meet in Lund in the summer of 2013 for a critical and congenial discussion of the book project and the line of its content, with the help of the Olin Foundation. This contributed to making it a more comprehensive and cohesive project. From that time on, the project was in the hands of the ‘3M’ group. As everyone knows, the three musketeers were really four, and it was no different with us, since we received valuable support from Remco van Rhee, who like many participants in the volume, wanted this project to be on the shelves ready for its audience. ‘All for one and one for all’ became the hallmark of the volume, and the 3Ms are grateful to Re-M-co for extending help as the book was nearing completion, changing the unreachable horizon into a finish line.

Together with the publication of its homonym and well-established journal, the present volume is an emblematic product of the European Society for Comparative Legal History. Like the journal, it is targeting a worldwide audience. It is quite an ambition to be at the forefront of an academic activity looking to the past. Both the journal and the book are six-year-old projects, which is young regarding the span of history they cover. Both are crafted as beacons of an emerging discipline and confidently await the critical judgment of their readership and history.

The authors are reputable scholars from all continents. The 18 chapters cover a broad array of topics while contributing to establishing comparative legal history as a recognized discipline. Besides the authors and their team at their respective institutions, several assistants are to be thanked for their contribution to the project: at the University of Lund, Jonas Axelsson and Martin Sunnqvist assisted with the Comparative Legal History Workshop; and at Louisiana State University, Emmanuel Billy, Matthew Boles, Jennifer Lane, Christabelle Lefebvre, William Patrick, Ioan-Alexandru Ulici, and Sara Vono did substantial editing. Last but not least, the editors thank Rose Campbell, copy editor, Catherine Cumming, Harry Fabian, and Laura Mann at Edward Elgar Publishing for their patience, continuous support, and remarkable work in producing the book.
