This project was created at the Chr. Michelsen Institute (CMI) in Bergen, Norway, a multidisciplinary research institution focused on development challenges around the globe. CMI researchers study a large number of sectors and state functions in many different countries. It has become apparent that some form of grabbing far too often stands in the way of development. With this project we have managed to present the insights of researchers and practitioners, at CMI and internationally, so that governments and the anti-corruption community can draw on their experiences and perspectives for more efficient reform. As editors, we are deeply grateful that our idea for this book project could be brought to life. Tara Gorvine at Edward Elgar Publishing has offered support and guidance from the day she heard about the proposal and we are very grateful to the publisher for working with us. Thanks also to their anonymous reviewers who contributed useful advice. We are grateful to our colleagues at CMI, who have contributed with many useful comments; special thanks to Ottar Mæstad, Siri Gloppen, Arne Strand, Ivar Kolstad, Odd-Helge Fjeldstad and colleagues at the CMI-hosted U4 Anti-Corruption Resource Centre, particularly Liz Hart and André Standing who provided both space and moral support for Aled's involvement as co-editor. Susan Rose-Ackerman has played an important role as a mentor, particularly in terms of Tina's experience of co-editing another volume with her (International Handbook on the Economics of Corruption Volume 2, Edward Elgar, 2013). At the Faculty of Law, University of Bergen, where Tina now works, Linda Gröning and Jørn Jacobsen have been steady sources of support and feedback. Most important, however, is how the project has depended on the many authors of this volume who wanted to contribute with their distinct experiences. In addition to writing their own chapter, they all acted as reviewers on other chapters in the volume, thereby improving overall quality. We have appreciated a very good collaboration with each one of them and thank them for their openness to our comments and willingness to meet what was, at times, a demanding production schedule.
