

Acknowledgements

Given the numerous individuals who contributed to a project of this scope, it is hard to know where to start with our acknowledgments. As such, we will simply follow the age-old advice to ‘begin at the beginning’ and proceed from there.

Our first thank you therefore goes to Alan Sturmer at Edward Elgar, for being quick to embrace the book’s concept at the very outset yet patient with its evolution thereafter. We are also indebted to the scholars whom we initially approached to conduct the country-specific studies featured in this multi-country collaboration: Philipp Sieger and Thomas Zellweger in Europe, Yanfeng Zheng in China, Tales Andreassi and Maria José Tonelli in Brazil, and K. Kumar in India. Thank you for your trust in the project’s potential and our ability to manage the process, for forming partnerships with other talented scholars to get the job done (thanks for coming onboard Melanie Ganter, Jie Huang and Li Tian), for securing such strong participation in your respective countries, for producing such great work in the first place, and for responding so tolerantly to our subsequent requests for refinement.

We are also grateful to those who lent a helping hand throughout the process and as the manuscript submission deadline drew nearer. Thanks to all of the business owner-managers (more than 1370) who responded to the surveys, to Nitu Nathani and Paula Torres for the excellent research assistance provided in India and Brazil respectively, to Grace Oliveira for the diligent administrative assistance, and to Youngbin Joo for pitching in on the references. And thank you, Christopher Cliff, for your help with the page formatting and proposed design for the front cover.

Finally, we thank one another for the intellectual curiosity, unflagging enthusiasm and good humor from start to finish.
