
Acknowledgements

As we hope this book describes, ingenious organizational activity (for which we aspire this book represents) requires the 'buy in' of many organizational actors. We would like to thank the following individuals and institutions for making this book possible: Social Science Humanities Research Council, as well as DeGroote School of Business, for providing the resources for our first conference on organizational ingenuity at McMaster; the team at the Halbert Center at Hebrew University, for providing a fellowship and support allowing for the completion of this book; Alan Sturmer, acquisition editor for Edward Elgar, for believing in this project from the very beginning; Teresa Cascioli, for supporting this initiative with her time and resources; Ruth Sutherland, for her unending and essential editorial and organizational assistance; Yervant Terzian and Lucy Djelaian, for making our first conference a success; Bill Starbuck, for his intellectual support and incisive keynote during the McMaster conference; all the many scholars involved in our project too numerous to name; and of course, in our personal lives, our wives and families who put up with our late nights, weekend vigils, and occasional absences from hearth and home.