
Contributors

Jill Steans is Senior Lecturer in International Relations Theory at the University of Birmingham, UK. Her main research interests are in the fields of gender and international relations theory and international political economy. She has written numerous books, book chapters and journal articles on these subjects, including Gender and International Relations (Polity Press, 2013, 3rd edition).

Daniela Tepe-Belfrage is Lecturer in Politics at the University of Sheffield, UK. She currently holds a Faculty of Social Science Research Fellowship. Her research is concerned with feminist political economy, critical theory, austerity, British politics, and politics of caring and parenting. Her research has been published as a monograph with Palgrave Macmillan, The Myth about Global Civil Society: Domestic Politics to Ban Landmines, and in journals that include International Politics, Public Administration, Review of International Political Economy and Capital and Class. She is the co-editor of a forthcoming special issue on Inequality and Insecurity in British Households in British Politics.

Anna M. Agathangelou is an Associate Professor in Political Science, York University, Canada. Her work focuses on post-colonial theory, international political economy, transnational feminisms, and racialization and bodies in world politics. She was a Visiting Research Fellow with the Program on Science, Technology and Society (STS) at the Harvard Kennedy School of Government, USA. Her research focused on corporeality and the use of science, technology and law knowledge in global power shifts and social order. Her work has been published widely, including in the Greek Review of Social Research and the International Feminist Journal of Politics.

Nadje Al-Ali is Professor of Gender Studies at the Centre for Gender Studies, SOAS, University of London, UK. She has published widely on women and gender in the Middle East, as well as transnational migration and diaspora mobilization. Her publications include: What Kind of Liberation? Women and the Occupation of Iraq (University of California Press, 2009, co-authored with Nicola Pratt); Women and War in the Middle East: Transnational Perspectives (Zed Books, 2009, co-edited with Nicola Pratt); Iraqi Women: Untold Stories from 1948 to the Present (Zed Books, 2007); and Secularism, Gender and the State in the Middle East (Cambridge University Press, 2000). Her most recent book (co-edited with Deborah al-Najjar) entitled We Are Iraqis: Aesthetics and Politics in a Time of War (Syracuse University Press, 2013) won the 2014 Arab-American book prize for non-fiction. She is a member of the Feminist Review Collective.

Kirsty Alexander is a Research Assistant at the University of Strathclyde, Glasgow, UK, and teaches the politics of gender and sexuality at the University of Stirling. Her current research revolves around the ethics and politics of love and examines the value of biophilia for critical theory and the politics of autonomy.

Drucilla K. Barker (Ph.D., University of Illinois, 1988) is Professor in the Department of Anthropology and the Women's and Gender Studies Program, University of South Carolina, USA. She is a radical feminist economist whose research interests are globalization, feminist political economy, and economic anthropology. Her work is interdisciplinary and ranges from examinations of the roles of gender, race and class in social valuations of labour, especially affective labour, to accounts of the financial crises that characterize late global capitalism. She is a founding member of the International Association for Feminist Economics.

Alp Biricik holds a Ph.D. degree in gender studies from Linköping University, Sweden. His research interests include: critical studies of men and masculinities; internet studies; intersections of body politics, citizenship and militarism; and sexuality studies. Some of his most recent publications are: A Walk on Istiklal Street: Dissident Sexual Geographies, Politics and Citizenship in Istanbul (Linköping University Press, 2014), 'Hegemony, Transpatriarchies, ICTs and Virtualization', with Jeff Hearn, Helga Sadowski and Katherine Harrison, in Rethinking Transnational Men, edited by Jeff Hearn, Marina Blagojević and Katherine Harrison (Routledge, 2013) and 'The "Rotten Report" and the Reproduction of Masculinity, Nation and Security in Turkey', in Making Gender, Making War: Violence, Military and Peacekeeping Practices, edited by Annica Kronsell and Ericka Svedberg (Routledge, 2011).

Andrea den Boer is a Senior Lecturer in the School of Politics and International Relations at the University of Kent, UK. Her research focuses on gender and international relations issues, with an emphasis on women's rights and the effectiveness of the UN human rights system, as well as the causes and consequences of violence against women. She is the co-author, along with Valerie Hudson, of numerous publications on the effect of the demographic gender imbalance in Asia, including the award-winning book Bare Branches: The Security Implications of Asia's Surplus Male Population (MIT Press, 2004). She is editor of the journal Global Society: Journal of Interdisciplinary International Relations and a Principal Investigator on the WomanStats Project, an international database and interdisciplinary research project that facilitates investigations of the linkage between the situation of women and the security of nation-states.

Eileen Boris, the Hull Professor of Feminist Studies and Professor of History, Black Studies and Global Studies at the University of California, Santa Barbara, USA, writes on home and work, social reproduction and social politics. She is the author of the prizewinning books Home to Work: Motherhood and the Politics of Industrial Homework in the United States (Cambridge University Press, 1994) and, with Jennifer Klein, Caring for America: Home Health Workers in the Shadow of the Welfare State (Oxford University Press, 2012, 2015). Her current project considers the making of the woman worker through global labour stands, using the International Labour Organization as her archive.

Katherine E. Brown is a Lecturer in Defence Studies at King's College London, UK. Her research is focused on women's involvement in religio-political violence and state responses to these. Her work highlights the gendered impact of contemporary counter-terrorism policies worldwide on human rights and women's security. She has published widely, details of which can be found at <http://www.kcl.ac.uk/sspp/departments/dsd/people/dsd-a-to-z/brown.aspx>, and she tweets @K_E_Brown27.

Claudia Brunner studied political science and gender studies in Vienna and Paris. She holds a Ph.D. in political science. She has repeatedly taught and done research at the Centre for Transdisciplinary Gender Studies at Humboldt University in Berlin, Germany and is currently based at the Centre for Peace Studies and Peace Education at the Alps-Adriatic University of Klagenfurt, Austria as an Assistant Professor. Her transdisciplinary work, for which she has received several scientific awards, focuses on the entanglements of political and epistemic violence and combines elements of sociology of knowledge, discourse/dispositive research, feminist as well as post- and decolonial theory, and feminist international relations (IR).

Doris Buss is a Professor of Law at Carleton University, Ottawa, Canada, teaching and researching in the areas of international law and human rights, women's rights, global social movements and feminist theory. Her research examines international dimensions of gender equality and women's rights norms, and their contestation in internationalized legal, regulatory and policy sites. She is the author (with Didi Herman) of Globalizing Family Values: The International Politics of the Christian Right (Minnesota Press, 2003), co-editor (with Ambreena Manji) of International Law: Modern Feminist Approaches (Hart, 2005) and co-editor (with Joanne Lebert, Blair Rutherford and Donna Sharkey) of Sexual Violence in Conflict and Post-conflict Societies: International Agendas and African Contexts (Routledge, 2014).

Gülay Caglar is a Research Fellow in the Division of Gender and Globalization at the Humboldt University of Berlin, Germany. Her research interests include feminist international political economy (IPE), global food governance, feminist value chain analysis and knowledge in global governance. Currently she is leading two subprojects with a gender focus within a research consortium on food security and horticultural value chains in East Africa (HORTINLEA). In her research she investigates how shifts in gendered food practices (production, consumption, food preparation) affect policy priorities in global food governance. She co-edited the book Feminist Strategies in International Governance with Elisabeth Prügl and Susanne Zwingel (Routledge, 2013).

Terrell Carver is Professor of Political Theory at the University of Bristol, UK, and a graduate of Columbia University and Balliol College, Oxford, UK. His engagement with feminist and gender theory began in the mid-1980s in relation to Marx and Engels. More recently he is the author and editor (with Samuel A. Chambers) of critical studies on the political theory of Judith Butler, Judith Butler and Political Theory: Troubling Politics (Routledge, 2008) and Judith Butler's Precarious Politics: Critical Reflections (Routledge, 2008). He has published widely on sex, gender and sexuality, and in particular on masculinity/ies. He is the author of Men in Political Theory (Manchester University Press, 1998) and 'Men in the Feminist Gaze: What Does This Mean in IR?' (Millennium, 2008, 37 (1), 107–122) and 'Men and Masculinities in International Relations Research' (Brown Journal of World Affairs, 2014, 21 (1), 113–126).

Hilary Charlesworth is Distinguished Professor of International Law and Human Rights at the Australian National University. She also holds an Australian Research Council Laureate Fellowship. Her research includes the structure of the international legal system, peacebuilding, human rights law and international humanitarian law, and international legal theory, particularly feminist approaches to international law. She received the 2001 American Society of International Law book award for creative legal scholarship for her book, co-authored with Christine Chinkin, The Boundaries of International Law: A Feminist Analysis (Manchester University Press, 2000). She was also awarded, with Christine Chinkin, the American Society of International Law's Goler T. Butcher award in 2006 for 'outstanding contributions to the development or effective realization of international human rights law'. She is an associate member of the Institut de Droit International and served as judge ad hoc in the International Court of Justice in the Whaling in the Antarctic Case (2011–14).

Christine Chinkin, FBA is Professor in International Law at the London School of Economics, UK and a William C. Cook Global Law Professor at the University of Michigan Law School, USA. She is an academic member of Matrix Chambers. She is the author of many articles on issues of international law and human rights, including co-author of The Boundaries of International Law: A Feminist Analysis (Manchester University Press, 2000, with H. Charlesworth) and of The Making of International Law (Oxford University Press, 2007, with A. Boyle), and co-editor of The UN Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women: A Commentary (Oxford University Press, 2012, with M. Freeman and B. Rudolf). She was Scientific Advisor to the Council of Europe's committee for the drafting of the Convention on Preventing and Combating Violence against Women and Domestic Violence, 2011.

Akosua K. Darkwah, Ph.D. is a Senior Lecturer in the Department of Sociology as well as Director of the Centre for Gender Studies and Advocacy, both located at the University of Ghana. Her research interest is in the ways in which global economic policies and practices open up as well as limit Ghanaian women's opportunities for work. She has also been involved in a large-scale global project that investigated the pathways to women's empowerment. Some of the findings from this research are available in a UN Women's 2013 publication titled Paid Work, Women's Empowerment and Inclusive Growth: Transforming the Structures of Constraint.

Paula Drumond is a Ph.D. candidate in international relations and political science at the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies (IHEID), Geneva, Switzerland. She is also a Researcher of the Global South Unit for Mediation (GSUM), Pontifical Catholic University of Rio de Janeiro (PUC-Rio), Brazil. She received her MA degree in international relations from the Institute of International Relations (IRI), PUC-Rio, where she worked as a Lecturer and Deputy Coordinator of the International Relations BA Program. Her research interests include gender issues in international security and, more specifically, conflict-related sexual violence and gender inclusion in peace-related efforts. She has authored chapters on these themes in edited volumes published by Routledge (2011) and IPEA (2012), and she is currently co-editing a reader in international mediation.

A. Cooper Drury (Ph.D., Arizona State University, 1997) is Professor and Chair of Political Science at the University of Missouri, USA. He is also editor-in-chief of Foreign Policy Analysis. His primary research interests focus on the use, outcome and consequences of economic sanctions.

Richard C. Eichenberg is Associate Professor of Political Science at Tufts University, USA. He has held grants and fellowships from the Mellon Foundation, the Ford Foundation, the Center for International Affairs at Harvard University, and the Social Science Research Council. His research focuses on public opinion, foreign policy, European integration and gender politics. His articles have appeared in the American Political Science Review, International Organization, International Security, Journal of Conflict Resolution, Mershon International Studies Review, Policy Sciences, Public Opinion Quarterly and World Politics.

Catherine Eschle is a Senior Lecturer at the University of Strathclyde, Glasgow, UK. Her research and teaching explore the activities and aspirations of social movements in global politics and their implications for the discipline of international relations, with a particular interest in feminist theory and practice. Along with Bice Maiguashca, she pursued an Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC)-funded research project on feminist 'anti-globalization' activism, which has resulted in, among other things, a 2010 book, Making Feminist Sense of the Global Justice Movement, and, more recently, a 2014 article in Political Studies entitled 'Reclaiming Feminist Futures: Co-opted and Progressive Politics in a Neoliberal Age'. She has also written on anti-nuclear activism, including 'Gender and the Subject of (Anti-)Nuclear Politics: Revisiting Women Campaigners against the Bomb' (International Studies Quarterly, 2013, 57 (4), 713–724), and her current research focuses on anti-austerity and anti-nuclear protest camps in Scotland.

Emma A. Foster is a Lecturer in International Politics and Gender in the Department of Political Science and International Studies at the University of Birmingham, UK. Her research interests include gender and sexuality, environmental politics and Foucault. She is currently researching issues related to queer ecology and queer(ing) development. She has published in a variety of journals, including Gender, Place and Culture, British Journal of Politics and International Relations and Globalizations.

Jane Freedman is a Professor at the Université de Paris 8, France and a member of the Centre de Recherches Sociologiques et Politiques de Paris (CRESPPA). Her research has focused on gender and migration, with a particular attention to gender in refugee and asylum policies at national and international level. She has also worked as a consultant for the UNHCR, and for various non-governmental organizations and international organizations involved in the protection of asylum seekers and migrants. A revised and updated second edition of her book Gendering the International Asylum and Refugee Debate was published by Palgrave Macmillan in 2015.

Penny Griffin is Senior Lecturer in International Relations at the University of New South Wales, Australia. Her research explores the processes, practices and effects of the contemporary global political economy with a view to understanding how these shape and are shaped by gender identity(ies), and includes publications with Palgrave Macmillan (Gendering the World Bank: Neoliberalism and the Gendered Foundations of Global Governance, 2009, winner of the 2010 BISA IPEG book prize) and in the journals Men and Masculinities, New Political Economy, Review of International Political Economy, British Journal of Politics and International Relations, Australian Journal of International Affairs and Globalizations.

Carol Harrington teaches courses on sociology of violence, social policy and knowledge politics at Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. Her research concerns politics and policy on violence against women and sexual violence. In addition to her book Politicization of Sexual Violence from Abolitionism to Peacekeeping (Ashgate, 2010) she has published articles on anti-sex-trafficking policy in Bosnia and Kosovo and on gender expertise within peacekeeping operations.

Jeff Hearn is: Guest Research Professor in the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences, based in Gender Studies, Örebro University, Sweden; Professor of Management and Organization, Hanken School of Economics, Helsinki, Finland; Professor of Sociology, University of Huddersfield, UK; and UK Academician in the Social Sciences. He is co-managing editor of Routledge Advances in Feminist Studies and Intersectionality, co-editor of NORMA: International Journal of Masculinity Studies and associate editor of Gender, Work and Organization. In 2010 he presented the 26th T.H. Marshall lecture on 'Genders, Gendering and Citizenship'. His interests focus on critical studies on men and masculinities, organizations, policy, sexualities, violences and autoethnography, as articulated in his many books, including Men in the Public Eye (Routledge, 1992), 'Sex' at 'Work' (Harvester Wheatsheaf, 1995), The Violences of Men (Sage, 1998), Sex, Violence and the Body (Palgrave Macmillan, 2008), The Limits of Gendered Citizenship (Routledge, 2011) and, most recently, Rethinking Transnational Men (Routledge, 2013). Current research focuses on men, gender and transnationalization.

Paul Higate is Reader in Gender and Security in the School for Sociology, Politics and International Studies at the University of Bristol, UK. He has published on military and militarized masculinities within the context of: the transition from military to civilian life; United Nations peacekeeping; and private military and security companies. He is currently conducting research into the British military's Reservists programme.

Catherine Hoskyns is Professor Emerita in European Studies and Gender Politics at Coventry University, UK. She is also a Visiting Fellow at the Centre for the Study of Globalisation and Regionalisation (CSGR) in the University of Warwick, UK. She spent many years studying the gender politics of the EU and is the author of Integrating Gender: Women, Law and Politics in the European Union (Verso, 1996). More recently she has been researching the composition of social reproduction and how it can be measured and valued. She is also involved in an experimental project in Nicaragua, which is pioneering the inclusion of a component for women's unpaid work in the cost structure of fair trade contracts for sesame and coffee. With Shirin M. Rai she is currently investigating the depletion which women suffer as a result of social reproduction, especially in times of crisis and recession.

Valerie M. Hudson is Professor and George H.W. Bush Chair at the Bush School of Government and Public Service at Texas A&M University, USA. She is co-author of Bare Branches: The Security Implications of Asia's Surplus Male Population (MIT Press, 2004), Sex and World Peace (Columbia University Press, 2012) and The Hillary Doctrine: Sex and American Foreign Policy (Columbia University Press, 2015). She was named Distinguished Scholar of Foreign Policy Analysis in 2015 by the Foreign Policy Analysis Section of the International Studies Association, and her research has been funded by the National Science Foundation, the US Department of Defense and the Andrew Carnegie Fellowship. She is a founder and Principal Investigator of the Woman-Stats Project.

Ruth Jacobson has worked on issues of gender, armed conflict and peace since the 1980s, when she witnessed the impact of war on women and girls in Mozambique and Angola at first hand. Since then, she has carried out fieldwork in a wide range of conflict-affected contexts, including Northern Ireland and the South Caucasus. During the 1990s, she was a staff member of the Department of Peace Studies at the University of Bradford, UK, where she was a co-editor of the volume States of Conflict: Gender, Violence and Resistance (Zed Books, 1999). Since then, she has worked as an independent researcher and consultant, and continues to carry out fieldwork in Mozambique on the gendered processes of post-conflict reconstruction. She remains an Honorary Visiting Research Fellow at the Department of Peace Studies.

Jane S. Jaquette is Professor Emerita in the Politics and Diplomacy and World Affairs departments at Occidental College, Los Angeles, USA and is affiliated with the Watson Institute, Brown University, USA. She has published over 60 articles, edited and contributed to books on comparative women's political participation, including: Women in Politics (Wiley, 1974); The Women's Movement in Latin America (Westview, 1994, 2nd edition); Women and Democracy: Latin America and Central and Eastern Europe (Johns Hopkins University Press, 1998, with Sharon Wolchik); Women and Gender Equity in Economic Theory and Practice (Duke University Press, 2006, with Gale Summerfield); and Feminist Agendas and Democracy in Latin America (Duke University Press, 2009), and published essays on feminist interpretations of Machiavelli and Hobbes. She served as President of the Association for Women in Development (1990–91) and of the Latin American Studies Association (1995–97) and is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and the Pacific Council on International Policy.

Jutta Joachim is Associate Professor in the Institute of Political Science, University of Hannover, Germany. She received her Ph.D. in political science from the University of Wisconsin-Madison, USA and her MA in international studies from the University of South Carolina, USA. She is author of Agenda Setting, the UN, and NGOs: Gender Violence and Reproductive Rights (Georgetown University Press, 2007) and co-editor of International Organizations and Implementation: Enforcers, Managers, Authorities? (Routledge, 2008) and Transnational Activism in the UN and the EU: A Comparative Study (Routledge, 2009). Her articles have appeared in, among others, International Studies Quarterly, German Journal for International Relations, Security Dialogue, Millennium, Cambridge Review of International Affairs, Comparative European Politics and Journal of European Public Policy.

Toni A.M. Johnson is a Lecturer in Law at the University of Leicester, UK and currently a Visiting Scholar at the Australian National University. Her research critically analyses the asylum system, focusing specifically on the intersection of gender, sexuality and race using a feminist/critical theory framework.

Johanna Kantola is an Academy Research Fellow (2012–18) in Gender Studies in the Department of Philosophy, History, Culture and Art Studies, University of Helsinki, Finland, where she also has a permanent position as Senior Lecturer in Gender Studies. Her monograph Gender and the European Union was published by Palgrave Macmillan in 2010. She is the editor, with Sarah Childs, of Palgrave Macmillan's Gender and Politics Book Series. Her research has appeared in a wide range of international refereed journals, including Politics and Gender, International Feminist Journal of Politics, Social Politics and European Journal of Women's Studies.

Helen M. Kinsella is an Associate Professor in the Political Science Department at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, USA. Her research interests include contemporary political theory, feminist theories, international law, especially international humanitarian law and human rights, and armed conflict, especially gender and armed conflict. Publications include the monograph, The Image before the Weapon: A Critical History of the Distinction between Combatant and Civilian (Cornell University Press, 2011) and articles in Signs: Journal of Women in Culture and Society and Political Theory.

Paul Kirby is a Lecturer in International Security at Sussex University, UK. He is currently working on the UK Government's Preventing Sexual Violence Initiative and its relationship to questions of gender equality, security and ethical foreign policy. His other work has focused on gendered attributions of responsibility for violence and on the connections between technology, politics and war. His work has been published widely in academic journals including International Affairs, Men and Masculinities and International Feminist Journal of Politics.

Eleonore Kofman is Professor of Gender, Migration and Citizenship and Co-director of the Social Policy Research Centre at Middlesex University London, UK. She has published extensively on gender and migration, especially on family and skilled migration. Her books include the co-edited Gender, Generation and Family in International Migration (University of Amsterdam Press, 2011) and the co-authored Gendered Migrations and Global Social Reproduction (Palgrave, 2015).

Bice Maiguashca is a Senior Lecturer in Politics at Exeter University, UK. Her publications include: Making Feminist Sense of the Global Justice Movement (Rowman & Littlefield, 2010, co-authored monograph with Catherine Eschle); Contemporary Political Agency: Theory and Practice in an Age of Globalization (Routledge, 2013, co-edited with Raffaele Marchetti); and “‘They’re Talkin’ bout a Revolution”, Feminism, Anarchism and the Politics of Social Change in the Global Justice Movement’ (Feminist Review, 2014, 106, 78–94).

Cristina Masters is Lecturer in International Politics at the University of Manchester, UK. She has published numerous articles and book chapters on feminism, masculinity, and security practices in international politics. Her book Gender and Technologies of Security is forthcoming with Routledge in 2016.

Laura McLeod is a Lecturer in International Politics at the University of Manchester, UK. She has worked at Manchester since January 2011, and has been a post-doctoral research associate on the Understanding Institutional Change project (www.manchester.ac.uk/uic), where she researched gender presence in post-conflict peace settlements and constitutional reform, paying particular attention to Bosnia-Herzegovina. She has also carried out research on gender security discourses and post-conflict feminist organizing in Serbia. Her broader research interests are focused upon gender, feminism, security studies and peacebuilding.

Rekha Pande is Professor and Head of Department, Department of History and Joint Faculty, Centre for Women’s Studies, University of Hyderabad, India.

Varun Pande is a Research Scholar in the Department of Computer Science, University of Bridgeport, USA.

Swati Parashar is a Lecturer in Politics and International Relations and member of the Global Terrorism Research Centre (GTReC) at Monash University, Melbourne, Australia. She previously worked with policy think tanks in Singapore and New Delhi. Her research and publications focus on critical war and security studies, feminist and post-colonial international relations, and women, gender and political violence in South Asia. Her book Women and Militant Wars: The Politics of Injury (Routledge, 2014) explores the gender dynamics of two conflicts in South Asia through the narratives of militant women. She is a social and political commentator on gender issues in the Asia Pacific region.

Dursun Peksen (Ph.D., University of Missouri, 2008) is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Memphis, USA. His research interests include economic sanctions, foreign military intervention, human rights, civil wars and democratization.

Zoe Pflaeger Young is a Lecturer in International Relations at De Montfort University, Leicester, with interests in critical globalization studies, development and practices of resistance. Her research is on approaches to empowerment, World Bank development policy, gender and development and fair trade initiatives, with a focus on Kenya's coffee industry.

Nicola Pratt is Reader of the International Politics of the Middle East, University of Warwick, UK. She is particularly interested in feminist approaches, as well as 'politics from below'. Her work has appeared in International Studies Quarterly, Third World Quarterly and Review of International Studies, among others. She is co-author of What Kind of Liberation? Women and the Occupation of Iraq (University of California Press, 2009, with Nadje Al-Ali) and co-editor of Women and War in the Middle East: Transnational Perspectives (Zed Books, 2009, with Nadje Al-Ali), as well as co-editor of Gender, Governance and International Security (Routledge, 2013, with Sophie Richter-Devroe) and Rethinking Gender in Revolutions and Resistance: Lessons from the Arab World (Zed Books, 2015, with Maha El Said and Lena Meari). From 2013–14, she held a British Academy Mid-career Fellowship, researching the history of women's activism in Egypt, Lebanon and Jordan.

Elisabeth Prügl is Professor of International Relations at the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies in Geneva, Switzerland, where she directs the Institute's Programme on Gender and Global Change. Her research focuses on gender politics in global governance, in particular in the areas of labour, agriculture and development. Publications include Transforming Masculine Rule (University of Michigan Press, 2011), 'If Lehman Brothers Had Been Lehman Sisters ...' (International Political Sociology, 2012, 6 (1), 21–35) and Feminist Strategies in International Governance (Routledge, 2013, co-edited with Gülay Caglar and Susanne Zwingel). She spent the 2014/15 academic year as a Fellow at the Women and Public Policy Program of Harvard's Kennedy School of Government.

Shirin M. Rai is Professor in the Department of Politics and International Studies and is Co-director of the University of Warwick's Global Research Priority Programme on International Development. She is the author of Gender and the Political Economy of Development: From Nationalism to Globalisation (Polity Press, 2002) and The Gender Politics of Development (Zed Books/Zubaan Publishers, 2008), co-editor

(with Kate Bedford) of Feminists Theorize the International Political Economy, Special Issue of Signs: Journal of Women in Culture and Society and co-editor of Global Governance: Feminist Perspectives (Palgrave, 2008, with Georgina Waylen). Her current research interests lie in the area of depletion, which is a gendered cost of social reproduction in everyday political economy.

Blair M. Read graduated from Tufts University, USA with degrees in political science and economics. Her senior honours thesis, entitled 'A Nation of Mothers: Public and Private Applications of Gender and Domesticity in Indonesian Culture and Politics', focused on gender norms and political behaviour in Indonesian families. She now holds the position of Research Support Associate in the Political Science Department of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, USA. Her research focuses on informal governance and political behaviour in developing contexts. She is currently working on a field experiment in Bangladesh that examines the effects of women's participation in local government on development outcomes.

Adrienne Roberts is a Lecturer in International Politics at the University of Manchester, USA. Her research and teaching interests are in the areas of international political economy, feminist political economy, finance, debt and debt-driven development. Her work has been published in journals that include New Political Economy, British Journal of Politics and International Relations, International Feminist Journal of Politics and Critical Sociology. She is co-editor of Rowman & Littlefield International's Global Political Economies of Gender and Sexuality Book Series, and co-editor of the forthcoming Handbook of the International Political Economy of Gender (Edward Elgar).

Christina Rowley is a Research Associate at the University of Bristol, UK. She researches the many and varied intersections between popular culture and world politics, often with a specific focus on gender. She has written about identities in US foreign policy, in/security and Buffy the Vampire Slayer, US presidential rhetoric, Vietnam War films, and the politics of Firefly and Serenity, among other topics. Her work has appeared in Security Dialogue, British Journal of Politics and International Relations, International Feminist Journal of Politics and Millennium. Her current interests include the ways in which popular culture is implicated in the concept of soft power, and the everyday popular cultural practices of diverse publics.

Arne Ruckert is a Senior Research Associate and part-time Professor at the Institute of Population Health, University of Ottawa, Canada. His principal areas of research include the international financial institutions (IFIs), the international aid architecture, the financial crisis and health equity, social determinants of health, and human rights-based approaches to development and health. He has worked as an independent consultant for various development and international organizations. He edited a collection, Post-neoliberalism in the Americas (Palgrave, 2009), and his research has been published widely, including in The Lancet, Review of International Political Economy, Critical Public Health, Canadian Journal of Public Health and Health Promotion International.

Anne Sisson Runyan is Professor and former Head of the Department of Women's, Gender and Sexuality Studies at the University of Cincinnati, USA, where she also directed the Taft Research Center. Her most recent co-authored and co-edited books include: Global Gender Issues in the New Millennium (Westview Press, 2014, 4th edition); Feminist (Im)-Mobilities in Fortress(ing) North America: Rights, Citizenships, and Identities in Transnational Perspective (Ashgate, 2013); and Gender and Global Restructuring: Sightings, Sites and Resistances (Routledge, 2011, 2nd edition). She is an associate editor and book review link editor for the International Feminist Journal of Politics and serves on several other editorial boards.

Jenny Russell is a 2015 graduate of the George H.W. Bush School of Government and Public Service at Texas A&M University, USA. While earning her Master of International Affairs degree from the Bush School, she concentrated on security and diplomacy, with a particular interest in gender and world politics. She is a Robertson Fellow and a Presidential Management Fellowship Finalist. Since graduating, she has done consulting work for UN Women and hopes to continue contributing to the scholarly nexus of gender and international security.

Laura J. Shepherd is Associate Professor of International Relations at the University of New South Wales, Australia. Her research focuses on gender politics, peace and critical security studies, and she is author or editor of five books, including the popular textbook Gender Matters in Global Politics (Routledge, 2015, 2nd edition). Much of her research engages with the 'Women, Peace and Security' agenda, and she has published widely on this theme, including a book with Zed Books in 2008 and several articles in journals such as International Studies Quarterly, European Journal of International Relations and Australian Journal of International Affairs. She serves on the editorial boards of a number of journals, including Critical Studies on Security, for which she edits the 'Interventions' section, International Feminist Journal of Politics and Australian Feminist Studies. She blogs as often as she can and tweets from @drljshepherd.

Laura Sjoberg is Associate Professor of Political Science with an affiliation with the Center for Women's Studies and Gender Research at the University of Florida, USA. Her research focuses on gender and security, with concentrations in feminist war theorizing, women's violence in global politics, and queer interventions in security politics. She currently serves as homebase editor of the International Feminist Journal of Politics and associate editor of International Studies Review. Her work has been published in more than 50 books and journal articles, including, most recently, her book Gendering Global Conflict: Toward a Feminist Theory of War (Columbia University Press, 2013).

Nicola Smith is Senior Lecturer in Political Science at the University of Birmingham, UK. She is interested in exploring the intersections between feminist political economy and queer theory, and is currently completing a monograph on 'Queer Sexual Economies'. She has published widely on globalization, social justice, feminist political economy, queer theory and commercial sex, and recent books include Body/State (Ashgate, 2013, co-edited with Angus Cameron and Jen Dickinson) and Queer Sex Work (Routledge, 2014, co-edited with Mary Laing and Katy Pilcher).

Maria Stern is Professor in Peace and Development Studies at the School of Global Studies, University of Gothenburg, Sweden. Her research interests are in (feminist) security studies, the security–development nexus, politics of identity and feminist theory. She is: author of Naming Security – Constructing Identity (Manchester University Press, 2005); co-editor of Feminist Methodologies for International Relations (Cambridge University Press, 2006); co-author of Sexual Violence as a Weapon of War? Perceptions, Prescriptions, Problems in the Congo and Beyond (Zed Books, 2013, with Maria Eriksson Baaz); and co-editor of Studying the Agency of Being Governed (Routledge, 2014). Additionally, her articles have appeared in the leading international academic journals, including African Affairs, Alternatives, Armed Forces and Society, International Journal of Peace Studies, International Political Sociology, International Studies Quarterly, Journal of International Relations and Development, Journal of Modern African Studies, Review of International Studies and Security Dialogue.

J. Ann Tickner is Professor Emerita in the School of International Relations at the University of Southern California, USA and Distinguished Scholar in Residence at the School of International Service at American University, USA. Her principal areas of research include international theory, peace and security, and feminist approaches to international relations. Her publications include: Gendering World Politics: Issues and Approaches in the Post-Cold War World (Columbia University Press, 2001); and A Feminist Voyage through International Relations (Oxford University Press, 2014). She is a past President of the International Studies Association. In a 2007 survey she was ranked number 21 of scholars having the greatest impact on the international relations discipline over the past 20 years.

Jacqui True is an Australian Research Council Professorial Future Fellow on the Political Economy of Post-conflict Violence against Women and a Professor of Politics and International Relations. Her over 100 publications include journal articles on gender mainstreaming and global governance and feminist methodologies that are among the most cited in the field. Her publications include: Theories of International Relations (Palgrave Macmillan, 1995, 2013); Gender, Postsocialism and Globalization (Columbia University Press, 2003); Feminist Methodologies for International Relations (Cambridge University Press, 2006, with Brooke Ackerly and Maria Stern, Chinese translation 2015); and Doing Feminist Research in Social and Political Sciences (Palgrave Macmillan, 2010, with Brooke Ackerly). Her book The Political Economy of Violence against Women (Oxford University Press, 2012) won several prizes. She is a member of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom's academic network, a co-founder of the Women, Peace and Security Academic Collective and a Fellow of the Academy of Social Sciences.

Heather M. Turcotte is committed to anti-oppressive transnational feminist approaches to decolonizing academia, the interstate system and daily exchange. She received her Ph.D. in politics (feminist studies) from the University of California, Santa Cruz, USA. She is an Assistant Professor in Crime and Justice Studies at the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth, USA and an associate editor at The Feminist Wire (www.thefeministwire.com). Her interdisciplinary research and teaching are located in the historical intersections of African and American studies, critical legal and justice studies, feminist studies and critical geopolitics. Her writing focuses on anti-white supremacy, the transnational criminalization of gender, the politics of violence, and collective frameworks for justice, abolition and liveable worlds. More on her work can be found at <https://umassd.academia.edu/HeatherMTurcotte>.

Heloise Weber is Senior Lecturer in International Relations and Development Studies at the School of Political Science and International Studies, University of Queensland, Australia. Her research includes the politics of microcredit and microfinance schemes and poverty, as well as critical engagement with other institutional policy approaches on poverty and development, such as the Millennium Development Goals and the post-2015 Sustainable Development Goals agenda. She has also contributed to debates on method and theory in the study of the global politics of development and inequalities. She is: editor of Politics of Development (Routledge, 2014); co-editor of Recognition and Redistribution: Beyond International Development (Routledge, 2013, with M.T. Berger); and co-author of Rethinking the Third World: International Development and World Politics (Palgrave Macmillan, 2014, with M.T. Berger).

Theo P. van der Weide is Professor in Information Retrieval and Information Systems, Intelligent Systems, Institute for Computing and Information Sciences, Radboud University, Nijmegen, the Netherlands.

Annick T.R. Wibben, Ph.D. is Associate Professor of Politics and International Studies at the University of San Francisco, USA. Her research contributes to critical (particularly feminist) security studies, international theory and feminist international relations. She also has a keen interest in issues of methodology, representation and writing – particularly in terms of feminist and narrative approaches. Her book Feminist Security Studies: A Narrative Approach (Routledge, 2011) addresses these issues, and her forthcoming edited collection Researching War: Feminist Methods, Ethics and Politics (Routledge) continues this work. Her current research examines the varied experiences of women who have served in the US military during the ‘Global War on Terror’.

Gillian Youngs, Professor of Digital Economy, University of Brighton, UK, has a background in the media, business and academia. She is a founding editor and now editorial board member of International Feminist Journal of Politics and has published extensively on feminist theory and issues related to international relations, communications and media and digital economy. Her books to date are: International Relations in a Global Age (Polity Press, 1999); the edited volume Political Economy, Power and the Body (Macmillan, 2000); Global Political Economy in the Information Age (Routledge, 2007); the co-edited volume Globalization: Theory and Practice (Continuum, 2008, 3rd edition); and the edited volume Digital World: Connectivity, Creativity and Rights (Routledge, 2013).

Marysia Zalewski is Professor in Gender/International Relations at the University of Aberdeen, UK. She has written widely on gender, methodology, theory, feminism, masculinity and international relations. Her book Feminist International Relations: Exquisite Corpse was published by Routledge in 2013. Her current research includes critical projects on sexual violence against men, the future of sexual violence, sexed violence and terrorism, performance and knowledge production in international politics and creative writing in international relations. She is on the editorial board of International Feminist Journal of Politics.

Susan Zimmermann is University Professor at the Central European University, Hungary. She has widely published on the history of international social protection policies and women's organizations, and on the politics of global inequality. Her most recent monograph in English is Divide, Provide and Rule: An Integrative History of Poverty Policy, Social Policy and Social Reform in Hungary under the Habsburg Monarchy (CEU Press, 2011). Her interest in global inequalities has informed publications such as 'The Long-term Trajectory of Antislavery in International Politics: From the Expansion of the European International System to Unequal International Development', in Humanitarian Intervention and Changing Labour Relations: The Long-term Consequences of the Abolition of the Slave Trade, edited by Marcel van der Linden (Brill, 2011), and a related monograph in German. Currently she is working on a book manuscript on the International Labour Organization, woman internationalists, and women's work in the interwar period (see extract on http://people.ceu.edu/susan_zimmermann).

Susanne Zwingel is Associate Professor at Florida International University in Miami, Florida, USA. Her research areas include women's human rights and their translation, women's activism around the world, global governance and gender, and feminist and post-colonial international relations theories. She is co-editor of Feminist Strategies in International Governance (Routledge, 2013, with Elisabeth Prügl and Gülay Caglar) and author of the forthcoming Translating International Women's Rights: The CEDAW Convention in Context (Palgrave). She is also co-editor of the interdisciplinary journal Zeitschrift für Menschenrechte/Journal for Human Rights.