
Contributors

EDITORS

Hans J. Giessmann is Executive Director at the Berghof Foundation (Berlin) and Adjunct Professor at the University of Hamburg, Germany. His expertise is on security issues and conflict transformation. In 1989 he participated as an expert for the New Forum, a civil society organisation, in the Roundtable talks at the East German Defence Ministry. Recent publications include Embedded Peace: Infrastructures for Peace: Approaches and Lessons Learned (2016, UNDP, Berghof Foundation).

Roger Mac Ginty is Professor of Peace and Conflict at the Department of Politics, and the Humanitarian and Conflict Response Institute at the University of Manchester (UK). He edits the book series Rethinking Political Violence and edits (with Oliver Richmond) the journal Peacebuilding.

CONTRIBUTORS

Abdul-Gafaru Abdulai is a Senior Lecturer at the University of Ghana Business School and an Honorary Research Fellow at the Global Development Institute, University of Manchester, UK. Dr Abdulai holds a First Class Bachelors degree in Political Science from the University of Ghana (Legon-Accra), an MPhil in Development Studies from the University of Cambridge (UK) and a PhD in Development Policy and Management from the University of Manchester (UK). His work has been published in African Affairs, New Political Economy, Democratization, Development Policy Review, European Journal of Development Research and the Journal of International Development. He won the prestigious Herti Gesseling Prize for the best paper authored by an African-based scholar in 2016.

Beatrix Austin is Senior Coordinator at the Berghof Foundation (Berlin), where she has also served as Co-Editor of the renowned Berghof Handbook for Conflict Transformation for the past 12 years. As a researcher, her interests focus on linking theory and practice in conflict transformation as well as dealing with the past. Recent publications include: 'Dealing with the Past', Berghof Policy Brief No. 6 (2017),

'Undeclared Wars – Exploring a Peacebuilding Approach to Armed Social Violence', Berghof Handbook Dialogue Series No. 12, (2016, eds. with Barbara Unger, Véronique Dudouet and Matteo Dressler).

Ram Kumar Bhandari is a human rights defender and researcher with an interest in non-violent conflict, human rights in the field, enforced disappearance, transitional justice and social movement. He has led the struggle to secure justice for victims of Nepal's conflict for over a decade and is the founder of the Committee for Social Justice, President of the National Network of the Families of the Disappeared and Missing in Nepal (NEFAD) and Co-founder and Senior Advisor of the Conflict Victims Common Platform for Transitional Justice. He is a PhD candidate at NOVA Law School, New University of Lisbon (Portugal).

Elvin Blakaj is an Assistant Lecturer at the Department of European Integration Studies of ISPE College in Prishtina (Kosovo). Elvin Blakaj's focus of study is on the interplay between international relations and European political landscape and how the influence of actors in international relations defines these interactions.

Umüt Bozkurt is Assistant Professor and Lecturer in the Department of International Relations, Eastern Mediterranean University. She completed her PhD in Politics at the University of York (UK). Her research interests are state theory, critical political economy and contemporary politics of Turkey and Cyprus. She has authored various book chapters and journal articles. Her publications also include a co-edited volume on Beyond a Divided Cyprus: A State and Society in Transformation (2012, Palgrave Macmillan).

Gordon Crawford is Research Professor in Global Development at the Centre for Trust, Peace and Social Relations at Coventry University (UK). He is also Honorary Professor at the University of Freiburg (Germany). His research examines issues of human rights, democracy and development, notably in countries of the Global South. He undertakes empirical research mainly in Ghana and, more recently, in Nepal. Current research interests include resource politics, development from below and the role of social movements in contesting structural inequalities. He is joint author of Understanding Global Development Research: Fieldwork Issues, Experiences and Reflections (2017, Sage).

Gjon Culaj is the Head of the Political Science Department and Lecturer at Security Studies Department at ISPE College in Prishtina (Kosovo). Professor Culaj's focus of interest is the state formation and nation-building processes and its effects that emerged in different states, strategic security studies and international relations, focused on combining both.

Nemanja Džuverović is an Associate Professor in Peace Studies at the University of Belgrade's Faculty of Political Sciences (Serbia). He studied peace studies and international relations in Belgrade and Oxford and received his PhD from the University of Belgrade. His work focuses on the inequality–conflict nexus, welfare in post-conflict environments, the political economy of liberal peacebuilding and international state-building in the Balkans. He is Co-Editor of the Journal of Regional Security and one of the co-founders of the Center for Peace Studies at the University of Belgrade.

Christian Emery is a Lecturer in International Relations at the University of Plymouth (UK). He completed his PhD at the University of Birmingham (UK) and was a Fellow in the Department of International Relations at the London School of Economics between 2010 and 2013. He is the author of US Foreign Policy and the Iranian Revolution (2013, Palgrave Macmillan) and a number of articles and book chapters on US foreign policy and US–Iranian relations.

Bettina Engels is Assistant Professor for Conflict Studies focusing on sub-Saharan Africa at Otto Suhr Institute for Political Science at Freie Universität Berlin (Germany). Together with Kristina Dietz she is the Director of the Research Group 'Global Change and Local Conflicts? Conflicts over Land in Latin America and sub-Saharan Africa in the Context of Interdependent Transformation Processes' at Freie Universität (Berlin). Her research focuses on political and socio-ecological transformation in sub-Saharan Africa, particularly in Western Africa.

Giuseppe Gabusi teaches international political economy and political economy of East Asia at the University of Turin (Italy). He is one of the co-founders of the Torino World Affairs Institute (T.wai), where he heads the programme 'Changing World Politics'. He has been Visiting Research Fellow at the Australian National University (Canberra) and at the East–West Center, Honolulu (USA). Together with Nicholas Farrelly he has edited 'Myanmar's Tentative Renaissance', a special issue of the European Journal of East Asian Studies. He is a member of the editorial board of the online journal OrizzonteCina and Editor of RISE, an online journal on contemporary South-East Asia.

Florian P. Kühn is Interim Professor for International Relations at Berlin's Humboldt University and an Associate Researcher at the Bonn International Center for Conversion (BICC, Germany). He has previously taught at Helmut Schmidt University (Hamburg), Humboldt University (Berlin) and Otto von Guericke University Magdeburg (Germany). He is Co-Editor of the Journal of Intervention and Statebuilding and has widely published on security and peace, state-society relations, political economy and epistemology of international intervention. He is currently leading a research project on risk perceptions and resilience strategies in sub-state groups and is working on the book Ambiguity and Peace, which uses ambiguity theory to explain conflict dynamics. Recently, he has published The Politics of International Intervention: The Tyranny of Peace (2016, ed. with Mandy Turner) and Risikopolitik – Eine Einführung (2017).

Avni Mazrreku teaches at ISPE College in Prishtina (Kosovo). His focus of study is European politics and institutions, specifically the European Union and its sectoral politics toward enlargement, focused on the Western Balkans countries in their onward march towards EU membership.

Sandra Pogodda is a Lecturer in Peace and Conflict Studies at the University of Manchester's Politics department (UK). Sandra completed her PhD in International Relations at the University of Cambridge (UK) as a Marie Curie Fellow before joining the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies (USA), the United States Institute of Peace and the University of St Andrews (UK) as a Postdoctoral Research Fellow. Her research focuses on state formation processes in the revolutionary societies of the Arab region, resistance movements, revolutionary challenges to peace and conflict studies and critical development studies.

Róisín Read is a Lecturer in Peace and Conflict Studies at the Humanitarian and Conflict Response Institute at the University of Manchester (UK). She joined the Institute in 2014 as part of the Making Peace-keeping Data Work for the International Community project. Róisín's research explores the politics of international interventions in conflict, with a focus on the dynamics of knowledge production and representation. Geographically, her research is centred on Sudan and South Sudan. Her PhD, completed at the Global Development Institute (then IDPM) in 2013, was a study of Oxfam's relief and reconstruction work in South Sudan between 2005 and 2012.

Simon Robins is a humanitarian practitioner and researcher with an interest in transitional justice, humanitarian protection and human rights. He is Senior Research Fellow at the Centre for Applied Human Rights at the University of York (UK) and has worked with victims of conflict in Nepal since he took charge of the Nepalgunj sub-delegation of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in 2005. He has researched and written widely on issues related to victims of conflict and transitional justice, in Nepal and elsewhere.

Stefano Ruzza is Assistant Professor in Political Science and International Relations at the University of Turin (Italy) and a co-founder of the Torino World Affairs Institute (T.wai), where he leads the ‘Violence and Security’ research program. He supervises the Italian translation of the SIPRI Yearbook booklet and directs the ‘Engaging Conflict: Prevention, Management and Resolution’ summer school. His main research interests are Myanmar’s transition, conflict transformation and peacebuilding, non-state armed actors in international relations and private military and security companies. On these topics, he has published in journals such as International Relations, Ocean Development and International Law and European Journal of East Asian Studies.

Christine Seifert is Desk Officer for Spain, Portugal and Andorra at the German Federal Office (Berlin). Previously, she worked as Executive Assistant to Professor Hans J. Giessmann and as Project Officer on federalisation and reconciliation in Somalia at the Berghof Foundation (Berlin). She holds an MSc in Conflict Studies from the London School of Economics and Political Science. Most recently, she contributed a case study on national capacities for conflict prevention in Peru to the Berghof Foundation Background Paper ‘Curbing Violence: Developing, Application, and the Sustaining of National Capacities for Conflict Prevention’ (2017, World Bank) to the United Nations–World Bank Flagship Study Pathways for Peace: Inclusive Approaches to Preventing Violent Conflict.

Goran Tepšić is a PhD student and Teaching Assistant in Peace Studies and Conflict Analysis at the University of Belgrade’s Faculty of Political Sciences (Serbia). His doctoral thesis research is focused on the role of political elites in the process of identity reconstruction in post-Dayton Bosnia and Herzegovina. Other research interests and publishing activity include international interventionism, protracted social conflicts as well as peace- and state-building in the Balkans. He is also a Research Associate at the Center for Peace Studies at the University of Belgrade (Serbia).

Mathijs van Leeuwen is a Rural Development Sociologist, who specialises in conflict and peacebuilding. After working as a researcher with the Netherlands Institute of International Relations Clingendael, and with various NGOs in Kenya, South Sudan, Guatemala and Bolivia, he conducted PhD research at Wageningen University (the Netherlands) on discourses and practices of civil society peacebuilding and its international support, including fieldwork in Burundi and Guatemala. Currently, he is Associate Professor at the Center for International Conflict Analysis & Management (CICAM) of the Radboud University, Nijmegen (the Netherlands). His current research work focuses on land disputes, post-conflict land reform, local governance, state formation, local peace-building and the discourses of intervening organizations on conflict and peace.

Annette Weber is a Senior Fellow at the German Institute for International and Security Affairs (SWP) in the Africa/Middle East department. Her expertise is on the Horn of Africa. Her research focus is currently on the Red Sea as a security nexus and migration from the Horn of Africa. She has published widely and advises the government on aspects of security and mediation. She is teaching at several universities and has previously worked for Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch on the Horn of Africa, as well as for the Ecumenical Network on Central Africa.