Contributors

Gabriela Alvarez Minte has a PhD from Birkbeck, University of London, UK and holds an MSc in Sociology from the University of Oxford, UK. Prior to pursuing the PhD she worked as a Programme Specialist for the Latin American and Caribbean Section at the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN Women) in New York, USA, and previously in the same position at the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM). She holds a Social Anthropology degree from the Universidad de Chile, and worked for several years in a non-governmental organization in Chile.

Elisa Ansoleaga Moreno is an Associate Professor at Diego Portales University, Chile in the Faculty of Psychology, and a Researcher in the Psychosocial Studies at Work Programme. She is also on the academic staff for the Masters in Social Psychology and the Doctorate in Psychology at Diego Portales University. She is the Principal Researcher in the project ‘Organizational Dimensions of Violence at Work in Chile: A Study in Three Economic Sectors Addressing Occupational and Gender Differences’, Universidad Diego Portales – Center of Women’s Studies (CEM).

Lucía Artazcoz has been the Director of Health Promotion at the Public Health Agency of Barcelona, Spain since 2004, and Associate Professor at the Pompeu Fabra University, Spain and John Hopkins University, USA. She completed her PhD in Public Health at Pompeu Fabra University. Her research interests lie in the area of work-related social inequalities in health and gender inequalities in health.

Anne-Emanuelle Birn is Professor of Critical Development Studies (University of Toronto Scarborough, UTSC) and Social and Behavioural Health Sciences (Dalla Lana School of Public Health) at the University of Toronto, Canada and served as Canada Research Chair in International Health (2003–2013). Professor Birn’s research explores the history and the politics and political economy of international and global health, with interests in Latin American health and social justice movements, child health and rights, philanthrocapitalism, and the societal determination of health; and emphases ranging from the scatological to the ideological. Her books include Marriage of Convenience: Rockefeller International Health and Revolutionary Mexico, Oxford University Press’s Textbook of International Health: Global Health in a Dynamic World, and Comrades in Health: US Health Internationalists, Abroad and at Home.

Rochelle Ann Burgess is a Lecturer in Health and Social Care at London Metropolitan University, UK and Research Associate, Health Economics and HIV/AIDS Research Division (HEARD) University of KwaZulu-Natal, South Africa. Rochelle is a community health psychologist with expertise in global health promotion. Her work highlights the value of community-based approaches to health in global settings, and takes interest in the interface between global health concerns and broader development issues such as poverty, governance, power relations and community mobilization (civil society).
Anna Coates is currently Chief of Gender and Cultural Diversity at the Pan American Health Organization, following her prior post as United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN Women) Deputy Regional Director for the Americas and the Caribbean, and other UN positions. She previously worked in academic research and teaching related to gender, ethnicity, development and health (particularly maternal health programme evaluation) and was Oxfam GB Global Gender Advisor. Her PhD in Gender from the London School of Economics (LSE), UK focused on indigenous women’s access to health care in Chiapas, Mexico.

Imma Cortès-Franch is a public health doctor. She works at the Occupational Health Department in the Public Health Agency of Barcelona, Spain. Her research focuses on the analysis of gender and social class inequalities in health, especially those related to working and employment conditions of paid work, and also the characteristics of domestic and family unpaid work.

Sandra Del Pino is currently the Cultural Diversity Advisor at the Pan American Health Organization. Her previous experience includes work on gender and human rights at the Western Pacific Regional Office of the World Health Organization in Manila, the Philippines, as well as extensive human rights work at the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in Geneva, Switzerland.

Karen Devries is a Senior Lecturer at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, UK. Dr Devries is a social epidemiologist with more than 13 years of experience conducting research on violence against women and children and adolescent health. Her work includes a programme of primary research in East Africa focusing on the development of violence prevention interventions in primary and secondary schools, large-scale cluster randomized controlled trials to test their effectiveness, cross-sectional surveys, qualitative and economic research, and methodological work. She has published more than 40 peer-reviewed journal articles, including in Science, the Lancet and PLOS Medicine.

Ximena Díaz Berr is a Sociologist from the University of Chile and is a Researcher at the Center of Women’s Studies (CEM) in Santiago, Chile and a specialist in gender studies, work and health. She is the Coordinator of the projects ‘Research, Policy and Practice with Regard to Work Related Mental Health Problems in Chile: A Gender Perspective’, ‘Validation and Standardization of Inventory of Violence and Psychological Harassment at Work IVAPT-PANDO. An Instrument for the Prevention of Workplace Violence as a Risk Factor for Mental Health’, ‘Development and Validation of an Instrument Enabling to Measure External Violence, Risk Factors and their Effect on the Mental Health of Chilean Workers’, and co-researcher of the project ‘Organizational Dimensions of Violence at Work in Chile: A Study in Three Economic Sectors Addressing Occupational and Gender Differences’, all projects of the Universidad Diego Portales–CEM. She is a Member of the Consultative Council of the Gender Equality Observatory in the Chilean Ministry of Health.

Lesley Doyal was educated in Sociology and Social Policy at the London School of Economics, UK and is now Emeritus Professor of Health and Social Care at the University of Bristol, UK. Her books include The Political Economy of Health (1979). and What Makes Women Sick (1995). Her research activities over the past decade have focused mainly on issues relating to the global HIV pandemic, with human rights as a key theme. This is reflected in her latest book Living with HIV and Dying with AIDS: Inequality, Diversity and Human Rights in the Global Pandemic (Ashgate, 2013).

Kareem Elzein holds an MPH in Health Promotion and Community Health from the American University of Beirut, Lebanon. He is currently pursuing a PhD in Comparative Education at the University of California, Los Angeles, USA. He has worked on topics including refugee and labour rights, and social movements.

Vicenta Escribà-Agüir is a public health doctor in the Health Promotion and Biomedical Research Foundation (FISABIO), Valencia, Spain. She is also an Associate Lecturer at the University of Valencia, Spain. She completed her PhD in Public Health at Alicante University, Spain. Her main areas of research lie on work-related social inequalities in health and gender (violence and psychosocial risk factors).

Benjamin Eveslage is a consultant to FHI 360 on the LINKAGES project. He holds an MSc in Research for International Development from the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, UK. His research focuses on analysing the experience of marginalized populations within processes of transcultural change and international development practice. For a total of 15 months working in Ghana (between 2008 to 2015), he has taken on a number of capacities including fieldwork with sexual minorities, key populations and sexual health organizations. From these experiences and research endeavours he hopes to highlight the tensions and prospects for joint health and human rights approaches in international development.

Christina Ewig is a Professor in the Departments of Gender and Women’s Studies and Political Science at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, USA. She has published widely on gender and health sector reforms in Latin America. Her book, Second-Wave Neoliberalism: Gender, Race and Health Sector Reform in Peru (Penn State University Press, 2010) won the Flora Tristán award for best book on Peru from the Peru Section of the Latin American Studies Association. Her articles on gender and social policy reforms have appeared in Social Science and Medicine, World Development and Social Politics, among other journals.

Jasmine Gideon is a Senior Lecturer in Development Studies at Birkbeck, University of London, UK. She is the author of Gender, Globalization and Health in a Latin American Context (Palgrave Macmillan, 2014) and the co-editor of Migration, Health and Inequality (Zed Press, 2013). Her current research explores health and well-being among the Latin American community in the UK.

Johanna Gonçalves Martin is an anthropologist with a medical background. She worked for several years with the Yanomami in Venezuela, first as a medical doctor and epidemiologist, and more recently as an anthropologist. For her doctoral dissertation at the University of Cambridge, UK she conducted ethnographical research on the intersection between health professionals’ reproductive and sexual health care practices, and Yanomami people’s practices around fertility and well-being. Her main interests are the anthropology of health, illness and healing practices; gender; translation and intercultural communication; global health; and comparative Amazonian anthropology.
Brendan Gough is a critical social psychologist and qualitative researcher interested in men and masculinities. Now based at Leeds Beckett University, UK, he has published many papers on gender identities and relations, mostly in the context of health, lifestyles and well-being. Professor Gough is a co-founder and co-editor of the journal Qualitative Research in Psychology; he edits the Critical Psychology section of the journal Social and Personality Psychology Compass, and is Associate Editor for the journal Psychology of Men and Masculinity.

Heidi Grundlingh is a Research Fellow at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, UK. As a social epidemiologist, she collaborates with a non-governmental organization partner (Raising Voices) in East Africa to articulate the theory of change for a child violence primary prevention programme in schools and further programme development and adaptation from primary to secondary schools (Good Schools Toolkit). Her primary research experience includes methods such as randomized control trials to test intervention effectiveness, cross-sectional surveys and qualitative research. She also has experience in developing, monitoring and evaluating child health and psychosocial programmes in Southern Africa.

Matthew Gutmann is Professor of Anthropology and Director of the Brown International Advanced Research Institutes at Brown University, USA. His research has focused on men and masculinities, politics, public health and militaries, and his books include The Meanings of Macho: Being a Man in Mexico City, The Romance of Democracy: Compliant Defiance in Mexico City, Fixing Men: Sex, Birth Control and AIDS in Mexico and Breaking Ranks: Iraq Veterans Speak out against the War (with Catherine Lutz). Most of his ethnographic research has been conducted in Mexico; he has also conducted collaborative research on and with United Nations peacekeepers in Haiti and Lebanon; and more recently launched a comparative project in Mexico City and Shanghai.

Rima R. Habib is Professor of Environmental and Occupational Health at the American University of Beirut, Lebanon. She has been the Chair of the Technical Committee on Gender and Work in the International Ergonomics Association since 2009. Her research – doubly focused on marginalized workers and unrecognized labour – aims to highlight the intersections of work, gender, environment and health.

Marcia C. Inhorn is the William K. Lanman Jr Professor of Anthropology and International Affairs at Yale University, USA. A medical anthropologist focusing on gender and health issues, Inhorn has conducted numerous research projects on the social impact of infertility and the emergence of assisted reproductive technologies to overcome both male and female infertility. She is the author of five books on the subject, including her most recent, Cosmopolitan Conceptions: IVF Sojourns in Global Dubai (Duke University Press, 2015), which focuses on global reproductive travel. Inhorn is also the founding editor of the Journal of Middle East Women’s Studies (JMEWS), and co-editor (with Soraya Tremayne) of Berghahn’s ‘Fertility, Reproduction, and Sexuality’ book series.

Deborah Johnston is a Reader in Development Economics at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS), University of London, UK. She has worked on sub-Saharan Africa for more than 20 years, researching rural labour markets, poverty, welfare and health. Of relevance for this Handbook is her work on HIV and nutrition in sub-Saharan Africa.

Dorcas M. Kamuya is a Researcher in Ethics and Community Engagement on the Global Bioethics Network, at the Ethox Centre, University of Oxford, UK. Her research centres on developing and evaluating community engagement strategies in Kilifi, Kenya, and facilitating sharing of experiences between programmes in Kenya, Thailand, Malawi, Vietnam and South Africa.

Louise Knight has a background working on HIV prevention trials and HIV/ARV clinic cohorts in East Africa and South Africa. Her more recent work has been situated within humanitarian medical non-governmental organizations strengthening health information systems and operational research. She is employed by the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine (LSHTM), UK, in the Gender Violence and Health Centre as the Trial Manager for the ‘Good Schools Study’, a cluster randomized controlled trial of a school-based intervention designed to reduce violence in schools.

Meri Koivusalo is a Senior Researcher in the National Institute for Health and Welfare, Helsinki, Finland. She has written broadly on international health policy, health and trade and commercialization and health.

Ramya Kumar is a Doctoral candidate in Social and Behavioural Health Sciences at the Dalla Lana School of Public Health, University of Toronto, Canada. Having completed her undergraduate degree in Medicine at the University of Peradeniya in Sri Lanka, she practiced as a Medical Officer with the Ministry of Health before commencing her graduate studies. Her research interests span a range topics, including social and health inequalities, Third World women's health, and the politics of international and global health. She holds a Master of Science in Global Health and Population from the Harvard School of Public Health, USA.

Marianna Leite is an independent researcher and practices international human rights law in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. She completed her PhD in Development Studies at Birkbeck, University of London, UK where she used a Foucauldian discourse analysis to explore the significant shifts in maternal mortality reduction policies over the past decades in Brazil. This research was the extension of the work she conducted as a visiting scholar at the International Gender Studies Centre at the University of Oxford, UK.

Jorge Lyra has a PhD in Public Health from the Oswaldo Cruz Foundation (FIOCRUZ), Brazil. He is a Professor at the Federal University of Pernambuco, Brazil, where he teaches postgraduate psychology courses. He develops projects that combine teaching, research and social intervention on issues related to health, communication, gender, feminism, men and masculinities, integrating interdisciplinary fields of knowledge as social psychology and public health. He is Coordinator of the Center for Research on Gender and Masculinity, and one of the founders of the non-governmental organization the PAPAI Institute, both in Recife, Brazil.

Eleanor MacPherson is a Postdoctoral Researcher at the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, UK. Her work to date has focused on how the broader social environment shapes men and women’s vulnerability to ill-health. Her doctoral research investigated HIV transmission and transactional sex in fishing communities in Southern Malawi.

Amalia Mauro Cardarelli has a degree in Sociology from the University of Paris VIII, France and a Masters in Urban and Regional Development, College of Mexico. She is the Director of the Center of Women’s Studies (CEM), Santiago, Chile. She is a Co-researcher on the project ‘Research, Policy and Practice with Regard to Work-Related Mental Health Problems in Chile: A Gender Perspective’, Universidad de Ottawa – CEM; and Co-researcher on the projects ‘Validation and Standardization of Inventory of Violence and Psychological Harassment at Work IVAPT-PANDO, An Instrument for the Prevention of Workplace Violence as a Risk Factor for Mental Health’, ‘Development and Validation of an Instrument Enabling to Measure External Violence, Risk Factors and their Effect on the Mental Health of Chilean Workers’, and ‘Organizational Dimensions of Violence at Work in Chile: A Study in Three Economic Sectors Addressing Occupational and Gender Differences’, all projects of the Universidad Diego Portales – CEM.

Peggy McDonough is Professor in the Dalla Lana School of Public Health at the University of Toronto, Canada. Her research centres on comparative life course dynamics and the social aspects of health, including inequalities, gender relations and employment. Her work appears in a range of sociology and social epidemiology outlets, such as the American Journal of Sociology, Journal of Health and Social Behavior, Work, Employment and Society, Gender, Work and Organization, Social Science and Medicine, Advances in Life Course Research and the Journal of Epidemiology and Community Health.

Benedito Medrado has a PhD in Social Psychology from PUC-São Paulo, Brazil. He is a Professor at the Federal University of Pernambuco, Brazil, where he teaches postgraduate psychology courses. His work combines teaching, research and social intervention on issues related to health, communication, gender, feminism, men and masculinities, integrating interdisciplinary fields of knowledge as social psychology. He is the Coordinator of the Centre for Research on Gender and Masculinity and one of the founders of the non-governmental organization the PAPAI Institute, both in Recife, Brazil.

Lynn M. Morgan is Mary E. Woolley Professor of Anthropology at Mount Holyoke College in Massachusetts, USA. She is a medical anthropologist and author of Icons of Life: A Cultural History of Human Embryos (University of California Press, 2009), as well as numerous articles about reproductive ideologies and foetal politics. She is currently writing about the backlash against reproductive rights movements in Latin America.

Susan F. Murray is Professor of Health, Society and Development at King’s College London, UK. A Sociologist in the International Development Institute, her research examines how health systems can generate or prevent health and wider social goals. She has addressed questions related to poverty and access to health care, the commercialization of health care, globalization and the health care economy, the social organization of health care, and maternal and reproductive health policy.

Justine Namakula is a Research Fellow at Makerere University School of Public Health, Uganda. She holds an MPhil in gender and development studies and is currently working towards a PhD at Queen Margaret University Edinburgh, UK. She coordinates all ReBUILD sub-projects and also leads the project on ‘Health Worker Incentives in Uganda’. Her work has focused on health workers’ life histories, effects of conflict on their lives and professions as well as the evolution of health worker incentive policies during and after the conflict in Northern Uganda.

Lorena Núñez Carrasco is a Medical Anthropologist and obtained her PhD from Leiden University in 2008. She is a Lecturer in Health Sociology at the Department of Sociology, University of the Witwatersrand, South Africa. Lorena has researched on various issues related to gender and migration as well as the linkages between migration, livelihoods and HIV/AIDS and, more recently, on experiences of faith healing with African Independent and Pentecostal churches. Her recent co-edited book entitled Healing and Change in the City of Gold brings together alternative ways of coping and support among new urban communities in post-apartheid Johannesburg. She is co-editor of the book Routes and Rites to the City: Mobility, Diversity, and Religious Space in Johannesburg (forthcoming) that explores urban diversity through the lens of religious practices. She also has an interest in the topics of death, funeral, burials and end-of-life care among cross-border migrants.

Sarah Payne is Professor in Health Policy and Gender at the School for Policy Studies, University of Bristol, UK. Her research interests include gender equality and gender equity in health and health policy, poverty, exclusion and health, and global health governance.

Esther Richards is a Postdoctoral Researcher and Lecturer in Research Methods at the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, UK. Her research centres on gender equity in health and development, with a particular focus on reproductive health and rights, religion and post-conflict contexts, including Timor-Leste, Northern Uganda, Sierra Leone and Mozambique.

Noel Richardson is Director of the National Centre for Men’s Health at the Institute of Technology Carlow, Ireland. He has extensive experience in the area of men’s health at a research, policy and advocacy level. He is principal author of the first ever National Policy on men’s health, which was published in Ireland in 2009 and is also co-author of the State of Men’s Health in Europe Report published in 2011. He is a board member of the Men’s Health Forum in Ireland and the European Men’s Health Forum.

Marlise Richter has worked as a Researcher at Project Literacy, the AIDS Law Project, the Treatment Action Campaign and the Reproductive Health and HIV Research Unit, in South Africa. She holds a PhD in Public Health and her research focused on sex worker access to health care services in sub-Saharan Africa. She works within the Policy Development and Advocacy unit at Sonke Gender Justice and holds visiting researcher positions at the School of Public Health and Family Medicine, University of Cape Town, South Africa and at the African Centre for Migration and Society, Wits University, South Africa.

Steve Robertson is Professor of Men, Gender and Health at Leeds Beckett University, UK. His main research interests are around social theories of masculinity and their application to aspects of health and health promotion. He has extensive experience of evaluating a range of men’s health promotion interventions. Most recently he has completed several commissions for the Movember Foundation considering the evidence about what works for men in terms of promoting mental well-being, and the role of ‘masculinity’ in men’s mental well-being. Steve has more than 50 peer-reviewed publications in the field and wrote what became a seminal text, Understanding Men and Health, in 2007. He has worked with fellow academics, policy-makers and practitioners from Australia, the United States and Canada and has acted as a consultant on gender and men’s health to the UK Department of Health and to the World Health Organization (Europe).

Mark Robinson is a Research Fellow at the Centre for Men’s Health, Institute for Health and Wellbeing, Leeds Beckett University, UK. With more than 20 years’ research experience since 1995, he has particular interest in researching men and mental health, ageing and gendered identities, men’s well-being at work, arts and mental health, and black and minority ethnic men’s health.

Jeannie Samuel is currently an Assistant Professor at the University of Western Ontario’s School of Health Studies, Canada, where she teaches in the area of health promotion. Jeannie also has extensive professional experience on gender and health-related issues, working with United Nations agencies in Latin America and Africa as well as with community groups in inner-city Toronto, Canada. She is based in Toronto.

Sarah Sexton is a Researcher and Editor who has worked for many years with the Corner House, UK and other social justice movements.

James A. Smith is an Associate Professor and works in the Office of Pro Vice Chancellor – Indigenous Leadership at Charles Darwin University, Australia. He has a longstanding research interest in men’s health, and the nexus between gender, equity and health policy development. He has worked in numerous executive and management roles in health and education strategic policy and planning settings in both governmental and non-governmental contexts in the Northern Territory, Australia. He is a Fellow of the Australian Health Promotion Association and is an Associate Editor of the International Journal of Men’s Health and the Health Promotion Journal of Australia.

Sara Smith is an advanced PhD student at the Yale University Department of Anthropology, USA. Her dissertation research examines the relationship between oncology, global health sciences and the lived experience of people with cancer in the Arab Middle East.

Denise L. Spitzer is a Professor in the Institute of Feminist and Gender Studies at the University of Ottawa, Canada where she served as the Canada Research Chair in Gender, Migration and Health and a Principal Scientist in the Institute of Population Health for a decade. In addition to undergraduate studies in Biology, Chinese Language, and Music, she holds a Master’s degree and Doctorate in Anthropology from the University of Alberta, Canada. She is interested in examining how global processes – intersecting with gender, racialization, migration status and other social identifiers – are implicated in health and well-being. Professor Spitzer has published in journals such as Gender and Society, Medical Anthropology Quarterly and the Canadian Journal of Public Health. Her edited collection, Engendering Migrant Health: Canadian Perspectives, was published by the University of Toronto Press in 2011, and was recognized in 2013 with a Women’s and Gender Studies et Recherches Féministes (WGSRF) Outstanding Scholarship citation.
Sarah N. Ssali is a Senior Lecturer at the Makerere University School of Gender Studies, Uganda and holds a PhD in International Health Studies. She is a co-principal investigator on the ReBUILD Uganda Project in Uganda, where she leads the research project on analysing patterns in household health expenditure in Gulu District, Northern Uganda. Her work focused on how the war changed households’ ability to meet their members’ health care needs, and how this affected especially the poorest households’ capacity to navigate the new health care market engendered by the war. She is active on the Research in Gender and Ethics: Building Stronger Health Systems (RinGs) steering committee.

Sally Theobald is a Professor of Social Science and International Health at the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, UK and member of the Gender and Health group. Her work focuses on gender equity and health systems strengthening in Africa and Asia. She is active on the Research in Gender and Ethics: Building Stronger Health Systems (RinGs) steering committee.

Rachel Tolhurst is a Senior Lecturer in Social Science and International Health at the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, UK. Her research centers on gender and equity in health systems, in Asia and Africa, including work on maternal health, post-abortion care, intimate partner violence, child marriage, and gender equity in scientific careers.

Jo Vearey holds a PhD in Public Health and is an Associate Professor with the African Centre for Migration and Society, University of the Witwatersrand, South Africa and holds a Senior Fellowship with the Center for Peace, Democracy and Development, McCormack Graduate School of Policy and Global Studies, University of Massachusetts, Boston, USA. Jo’s research focuses on migration and health in southern Africa and she has published widely. Jo is involved in a range of international partnerships including with the VU University, Amsterdam, the Netherlands; University of Massachusetts, Boston, USA; University of Oldenburg, Germany; and the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, UK.

Penny Vera-Sanso is Senior Lecturer in Development Studies and Social Anthropology at Birkbeck, University of London, UK. She has published widely on ageing, gender and poverty in urban and rural India, directed multidisciplinary, international research projects on ageing and poverty in India, and made two documentaries on older people in India, The Forgotten Generation and We’re Still Working. She is currently developing research on older people’s social and economic roles in the London Borough of Hackney, UK.

Sophie Witter is Professor of International Health Financing and Health Systems at Queen Margaret University Edinburgh, UK. She leads a research project on health worker incentives within the ReBUILD consortium, which studies health system reconstruction post-conflict. Her work has focused on reducing financial barriers to accessing health care in low- and middle-income countries, particularly for mothers and newborns, and on provider payment mechanisms which incentivize good-quality care for all.

Nadia Younes holds an MA in Middle Eastern Studies from the American University of Beirut, Lebanon. She is an advocate for refugees’ rights. Her years of experience as an organizer in marginalized communities have provided her with insights in understanding the issues that affect underserved populations.
Flavia Zalwango is a Social Scientist working with the Medical Research Council, Uganda’s Research Unit on AIDS. Since 2008 she has undertaken research involving women at high risk of HIV and sexually transmitted infections (STIs) and older people, focusing particularly on the impact of HIV on their lives. She is currently researching parenting interventions for preventing gender-based violence.