This book has materialized as the result of long-term and dynamic network connections between researchers in the social sciences sharing an interest in corporate influence on politics. Much experimentation, probing and analysis have taken place over the five years of exchange in the Govemark (Governance of Markets) network. We wish to thank all those who participated with ideas and papers in the Govemark network, first of all the contributors to this book, and also, in alphabetical order: Oana Brindusa Albu, Jonathan Alensky, Michael Barnett, Christoph Brumann, Steve Coleman, Jana Costas, Matilda Dahl, Colette Depeyre, Pauline Garvey, Malin Gawell, Patty Gray, Chris Grey, Martin Gustavsson, Melissa Fisher, Staffan Furusten, Hans Krause Hansen, Axel Haunschild, Frank den Hond, Dan Kärreman, Anna Leander, Monica Lindh de Montoya, Mark Maguire, Kathleen McNamara, Afshin Mehrpouya, Gwen Mikell, Peter Miller, Miguel Montoya, Fiona Murphy, Horacio Ortiz, Josef Pallas, Gustav Peebles, Ian Richardson, Jamie Saris, Mattias Schlögl, Ola Segnestam Larsson, JP Singh, Jens Stilhoff Sørensen, Tom Strong, Emma Svensson, Xavier C Tanghuy, Scott D Taylor, Steen Vallentin and Janine Wedel. We are grateful to the Swedish Foundation for Humanities and Social Sciences for funding the network activities of Govemark, and to the Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research (SCORE) at Stockholm University and Stockholm School of Economics for support.

To our contributing authors – it has been inspirational to work with you all! Thank you for sharing your research and your findings with us, for constructive conversations and for moving the field ahead. A large portion of the work for this book has blended in various ways with spheres other than academia, corporations or politics –with life itself. To our near and dear – our loving thanks.
