
Contributors

Paolo Barbieri, PhD, is Professor in Economic Sociology at the University of Trento, Italy. He is currently associate editor of the European Sociological Review. His main research interests are concerned with welfare and labour market dynamics in comparative perspective. Recent publications treat topics such as labour market dualism, deregulation and labour market intermediaries.

Armando Barrientos is Professor of Poverty and Social Justice at the Global Development Institute at the University of Manchester in the UK. His research focuses on the linkages existing between welfare programmes and labour markets in developing countries, and on policies addressing poverty and population ageing. His most recent books are Social Protection for the Poor and Poorest (2008, edited with D. Hulme, Palgrave), Just Give Money to the Poor (2010, with J. Hanlon and D. Hulme, Kumarian Press), Demographics, Employment and Old Age Security: Emerging Trends and Challenges in South Asia (2010, edited with Moneer Alam, Macmillan), and Social Assistance in Developing Countries (2013, Cambridge University Press).

Kim M. Blankenship, PhD, is Professor in the Department of Community Health and Prevention at Drexel University's Dornsife School of Public Health in the USA. Previously, she was Professor and Chair of the Department of Sociology and Director of the Center on Health, Risk and Society at American University, USA, and Director of the Social and Behavioral Sciences Core of the DC Center for AIDS Research. She researches the social dimensions of and structural interventions to address health, including community mobilization interventions for HIV prevention and the impact of mass incarceration on race and gender disparities in HIV/AIDS. She has received funding from the National Institute of Health (NIH), Centers for Disease Control (CDC) and the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation.

David Brady is Professor in the School of Public Policy and Director of the Blum Initiative on global and regional poverty at the University of California at Riverside, USA. He is the author of Rich Democracies, Poor People and editor of The Oxford Handbook of the Social Science of Poverty. His current research is focused on poverty and inequality; the effects of racial/ethnic heterogeneity and immigration for the politics of egalitarian social policy; and the relationship between long-term economic resources and life chances (especially racial inequality and health).

Eric Crettaz is Professor at the University of Applied Sciences of Western Switzerland in Geneva. He received his PhD at the Swiss Graduate School of Public Administration (University of Lausanne, Switzerland) for a study of policies that alleviate working poverty in Europe and North America. Between 2006 and 2011 he was a member of the Network of Excellence, Reconciling Work and Welfare in Europe (FP6) and has since then participated in several other research programmes dealing with poverty among the working-age population. He has specialized in the fields of comparative social policy and welfare regime analysis, inequality and poverty analysis among the working-age population, and more recently the impact of social policies on retirees' quality of life.

Giorgio Cutuli, PhD, is Assistant Professor at the Department of Sociology and Social Research of Trento University, Italy. His main research interests include social stratification, labour markets, income and inequality dynamics, longitudinal and counterfactual analysis. Recent publications include work on the effects of labour market regulation, the institutional determinants of school-to-work transition, and the distribution of unemployment and poverty risks among different social groups in Europe.

Juan Carlos Feres is President of the Overcoming Poverty Foundation (Chile) and Lecturer at the Center for Applied Economics of the University of Chile, and on the Master of Applied Economics and Public Policy course, University Alberto Hurtado (Chile).

Nina-Sophie Fritsch, Dr Mag., is Research Associate at the Department of Sociology at the University of Vienna, Austria. In 2015, she was awarded the Doc.Award by the City of Vienna and the University of Vienna for an outstanding dissertation. From 2017, she will be Hertha Firnberg Post-Doc Fellow (FWF) at the Institute of Sociology and Social Research at the Vienna University of Economics and Business. Her research interests cover comparative research in the domains of educational attainment, social inequality, the labour market and poverty, as well as interpretative research in the domain of gender inequality.

Marco Giesselmann, Dr rer. pol., is Research Assistant at the German Institute for Economic Research (DIW Berlin), Germany and Assistant Professor for Social Science Research Methods at Bielefeld University, Germany. His research is concerned with the impact of policies on labour market outcomes and economic well-being. He also deals with methodological issues and is particularly interested in the mechanics of panel data and multilevel analysis. Recent studies have been published in the European Sociological Review, European Societies and the Kölner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie.

Jeroen Horemans holds a PhD in social and economic sciences. Currently he is a Lecturer and a Postdoctoral Research Fellow affiliated with the Herman Deleeck Centre for Social Policy at the University of Antwerp, Belgium. His main research interests include in-work poverty, non-standard employment and income inequality in a comparative perspective. His recent publications include 'Polarisation of non-standard employment in Europe: exploring a missing piece of the inequality puzzle' (Social Indicators Research) and (with Prof. Dr Ive Marx and Prof. Dr Brian Nolan) 'Hanging in, but only just: part-time employment and in-work poverty throughout the crisis' (IZA Journal of European Labor Studies).

Amy Horton is a Lecturer in Economic Geography at the Department of Geography, University College London (UCL), UK. Her research focuses on inequality, finance and care work, as well as social and labour movements. She has a background in policy research.

Lane Kenworthy is Professor of Sociology and Yankelovich Chair in Social Thought at the University of California San Diego, USA. He is author of How Big Should Our Government Be?, Social Democratic America, Progress for the Poor, Jobs with Equality and Egalitarian Capitalism.

Murray Leibbrandt, Dr, holds the NRF/DST Research Chair in Poverty and Inequality Research, in the Southern Africa Labour and Development Research Unit, within the School of Economics at the University of Cape Town, South Africa. His research analyses South African poverty, inequality and labour market dynamics using survey data and, in particular, panel data. He is one of the Principal Investigators on South Africa's National Income Dynamics Study. Recent publications examine educational inequalities and the persistence of intergenerational inequality, transitions from school to work, minimum wages and poverty, and the drivers of household inequalities in South Africa.

Asaf Levanon is a Senior Lecturer at the Department of Sociology at the University of Haifa, Israel. His work focuses on institutional effects on ethnic, gender and class inequality in the labour market. Current research interests include the factors affecting the likelihood of poverty among workers and contextual variation in patterns of occupational sex segregation and in the magnitude of the motherhood wage penalty.

Daniel T. Lichter is the Ferris Family Professor in the Department of Policy Analysis and Management, Professor of Sociology, and Robert S. Harrison Director of Cornell's Institute for the Social Sciences, USA. He is past President of the Population Association of America (2012) and the Rural Sociological Society (2010–11) and served as editor of Demography (2002–2004). His recent work focuses on changing ethnoracial boundaries, as measured by changing patterns of interracial marriage and residential segregation in the United States. He is especially interested in America's racial and ethnic transformation, growing diversity, and the implications for the future.

Kezia Lilenstein is a Researcher at the Development Policy Research Unit (previously at the Southern Africa Labour and Development Research Unit) at the University of Cape Town, South Africa. Her research interests include analysis of labour markets, poverty and inequality, especially through the use of South African survey data.

Henning Lohmann, Dr rer. pol., is Professor of Sociology, in particular Social Research Methods, at the Faculty of Business, Economics and Social Sciences, University of Hamburg, Germany. His main area of research is poverty and social inequalities in an international comparative perspective. He is the co-editor of The Working Poor in Europe: Employment, Poverty and Globalization (2008, Edward Elgar Publishing, with Hans-Jürgen Andreß) and has authored a number of other publications on in-work poverty. Recent publications include work on educational inequalities and family policy.

Jen-Der Lue is a Professor of the Department of Social Welfare at National Chung-Cheng University, Taiwan. He received his Dr Rer. in Sociology from the University of Bielefeld, Germany. He has been invited as an expert to the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) and has been a Visiting Scholar to the Max-Planck Institute for the Studies of Societies, Germany. His specialized fields focus on comparative political economy, comparative social policy, health politics and political sociology. He has published journal articles in the Journal of Asian Public Policy, Social Policy and Social Work, Comparative Sociology, and more.

Bertrand Maître is a Senior Research Officer at the Economic and Social Research Institute in Dublin, Ireland. His main research interests focus on multidimensional approaches to poverty, social exclusion and quality of life. He is particularly interested in the development and the use of instruments comprising not only indirect but also direct measures of deprivation, ranging from durable goods to participation in social life, through to housing and environmental conditions. His recent work appears in Social Indicators Research, Journal of Family and Economic Issues, Longitudinal and Life Course Studies and the Economic and Social Review.

Laurie C. Maldonado holds an MSW and PhD in social welfare at the University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA), USA and was a predoctoral scholar at Luxembourg Income Study (LIS). She was a recipient of the PhD grant awarded by the Luxembourg National Research Fund, which supported her research that examined the consequences of social policy on the lives of single parents and their families in the United States and across countries. She has co-authored, with Tim Casey from Legal Momentum, Worst Off: Single-Parent Families in the United States: A Cross-National Comparison of Single-Parenthood in the US and Sixteen Other High-Income Countries. Her publications on single parents are featured in Community Work and Family and the Belgian Social Security Review. For Policy Press she has edited, with Rense Nieuwenhuis, The Triple Bind of Single-Parent Families.

Luis Maldonado is a Professor in the Department of Sociology at the Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile, with affiliation in the the National Research Center for Integrated Natural Disaster Management (CIGIDEN), Chile. Luis's research focuses on poverty, welfare regimes, natural disasters, quantitative methods and Latin America. He is currently involved in several projects, including: economic insecurity and natural disasters in Chile; preferences for redistribution in Latin America; survey and lab experiments in Chile; and research on the design and analysis of observational studies, particularly with panel micro-data.

Sarah Marchal is a Researcher at the Herman Deleeck Centre for Social Policy, Belgium. She is finalizing a PhD on minimum income protection provisions in the European Union (EU) member states. Her research interests include minimum income protection institutions and effectiveness, measurement of non-take-up and EU social policy.

Ive Marx is Professor at the University of Antwerp, Belgium and Chair of the Department of Sociology there. He is a Research Fellow at the Institute of Labor Economics (IZA) in Bonn, Germany. He directs research on minimum income protection and poverty, especially in relation to labour market change and migration, at the Herman Deleeck Centre for Social Policy, Belgium. His main research interest is labour market and welfare state change in relation to the distribution of income, with a particular focus on poverty. He has published extensively on the issue of in-work poverty and minimum income protection policies. The volume Minimum Income Protection in Flux, co-edited with Kenneth Nelson (SOFI), was published in Palgrave Macmillan's Work and Welfare Series in 2013.

Roxana Maurizio is Associate Researcher and Professor at the University of Buenos Aires, Argentina, and at Argentina's National Scientific and Technical Research Council (CONICET). She also works as a consultant for national and international organizations:

the International Labour Organization (ILO), United Nations Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), World Bank and United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Her areas of interest are labour economics, income distribution, poverty and social policies in Latin America. She has published articles and books about labour informality, labour institutions, international migration, income mobility, inequality and poverty, and labour and social programmes.

Rense Nieuwenhuis is Assistant Professor of Sociology at the Swedish Institute for Social Research (SOFI) of Stockholm University. He is interested in how the interplay between social policies and demographic trends gives rise to economic inequalities. His recent publications include work on family policy outcomes (in the Journal of Marriage and Family), single-parent poverty (in Community, Work and Family) and the impact of women's rising earnings on inequality among households (in Acta Sociologica). For Policy Press he has edited, with Laurie C. Maldonado, The Triple Bind of Single-Parent Families.

Brian Nolan is Director of the Employment, Equity and Growth Programme at the Institute for New Economic Thinking, Oxford Martin School, Professor of Social Policy at the Department of Social Policy and Intervention, and Senior Research Fellow at Nuffield College, University of Oxford, UK. His main areas of research are income and wealth inequality, poverty, and the economics of social policy. He has participated in a wide range of comparative studies on poverty, income inequality, social policies, tax and transfer policies, the labour market, the minimum wage, and health economics and inequalities.

Sharon Oselin earned her PhD from the University of California, Irvine, USA, in 2008. She is an Associate Professor of Sociology at the University of California, Riverside, and the Associate Director of the Presley Center for Crime and Justice Studies. Sharon's research areas include gender, crime, social movements, and culture. She is the author of Leaving Prostitution: Getting Out and Staying Out of Sex Work (2014, NYU Press), and her work is published in the American Sociological Review, Sexualities, Sociological Forum, Mobilization, Deviant Behavior, and elsewhere.

Sophie Ponthieux, PhD in Economics, is currently Senior Researcher at the French National Institute of Statistics and Economic Studies (INSEE), Deputy Editor-in-Chief of the INSEE journal Economie et Statistique, and research affiliate at Crest. Her main research areas include gender inequality, poverty (especially in-work poverty) in comparative perspective, and methodology of social indicators. She has recently published a chapter on gender inequality (with Dominique Meurs) in the Handbook of Income Distribution (North-Holland, 2015) and a number of articles and book chapters on the gender earning gap, on intra-household sharing of resources and decision-making, and on the European Union 2020 indicators.

Lucia Pradella, PhD, is a Lecturer in International Political Economy in the Department of European and International Studies at King's College London, UK. Her research focuses on the working poor in Europe, migration and imperialism. She has published several journal articles on in-work poverty, migration, and the global economic crisis, and is the author of two monographs: Globalization and the Critique of Political Economy (Routledge, 2015) and L'Attualità del Capitale (Il Poligrafo, 2010). She co-edited Polarizing Development: Alternatives to Neoliberalism and the Crisis (with Thomas Marois, Pluto, 2014).

Joaquin Prieto is a PhD candidate in the Department of Social Policy at the London School of Economics and Political Science, UK. He holds a BA in Industrial Engineering, an MSc in Economy and Environmental Management, and undertook postgraduate studies in Sociology at the Pontifical Catholic University of Chile. He founded and directed the Social Observatory Center at Universidad Alberto Hurtado, Chile, between 2005 and 2012. He is also an Associate Professor in the Department of Sociology at Universidad Alberto Hurtado. Since 2012 he has worked as researcher and consultant for international agencies such as the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB), Rand Corporation and Lincoln Institute of Land Policy. His current research interests are longitudinal survey methodology and survey quality, poverty dynamics and labour mobility, applied micro-econometrics and social policies.

Evgeny Saburov is a graduate student in the Department of Sociology at the University of Haifa, Israel. His main areas of interest and expertise are social inequalities, quantitative data management and its preparation for sociological research.

Wiemer Salverda is Professor of Labour Market and Inequality at the Amsterdam Centre for Inequality Studies, Netherlands, and Director Emeritus of the Amsterdam Institute for Advanced Labour Studies (University of Amsterdam). He coordinated the project 'Growing Inequalities' Impacts (GINI) (2010–2014). Before that he coordinated the European Low-wage Employment Research Network (LoWER) from 1996 to 2008, and various research projects related to the network. He contributes extensively to comparative research on wages, employment, and inequality, and regularly serves as an expert for the European Commission, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) and International Labour Organization (ILO).

Scott R. Sanders, PhD, is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at Brigham Young University, USA. His research examines variations in poverty and healthcare access across different demographic groups and geographic locations. His research also examines the link between poverty reduction and globalization in South-East Asia.

Stefani Scherer, Dr Phil., is Professor of Sociology at the University of Trento, Italy, where she currently directs the PhD programme in Sociology and Social Research. Her main research interests are inequality and social stratification processes in international comparative perspective, the analysis of life courses, and family and labour market dynamics.

Daniel Seikel, Dr rer. pol., is a political scientist and Senior Researcher at the Institute of Economic and Social Research (WSI) at the Hans-Böckler-Foundation, Düsseldorf, Germany. His main area of research is European integration, especially integration through law and European economic governance.

Dorothee Spannagel, Dr rer. pol., is a sociologist and Senior Researcher at the Institute of Economic and Social Research (WSI) at the Hans-Böckler-Foundation in Düsseldorf, Germany. Her main research interests are social inequality and comparative welfare state research with a focus on wealth and poverty. Recent work includes studies on social mobility as well as comparative research on material deprivation.

Brian C. Thiede, PhD, is Assistant Professor of Rural Sociology, Sociology, and Demography at Pennsylvania State University, USA, where he is also a research associate at the Population Research Institute. His research examines poverty and inequality, with a particular focus on spatial and racial inequalities in the United States. His recent work has examined approaches to measuring in-work poverty, measured rural–urban disparities in in-work poverty, and examined spatial inequality in the impacts of the 2007–2009 recession on employment in the United States.

Vidhya Unnikrishnan is a PhD student with the Global Development Institute at the University of Manchester, UK. She is working on old-age pension programmes in India.

Wim Van Lancker is an Assistant Professor of Social Work and Social Policy at the Centre for Sociological Research (CESO), University of Leuven, Belgium. He is also affiliated with the Herman Deleeck Centre for Social Policy at the University of Antwerp, Belgium. His main research areas are family policy, child poverty and social inequality, the design and effectiveness of social policy measures, and the social investment state. He contributed to the Handbook of Social Policy Evaluation (edited by Bent Greve). Recent publications have appeared in Social Policy and Administration, Journal of European Public Policy, Social Science Research, Social Indicators Research and the International Journal of Comparative Sociology.

Leen Vandecasteele is a Junior Professor of Sociology at the University of Tübingen, Germany. Her research interests are in social stratification and the life course. Her publications examine mechanisms of social inequality in the life course and how these are influenced by the institutional and social context. She previously worked at the European University Institute in Italy, the University of Manchester, UK, and the University of Leuven, Belgium. Her research has been published in, among others, the European Sociological Review, Review of Income and Wealth, European Societies and Journal of Happiness Studies.

Gerlinde Verbist is Senior Researcher at the Herman Deleeck Centre for Social Policy, Belgium. She holds a PhD in economics. Her main research interests include tax benefit microsimulation modelling, measurement of income inequality and redistribution, and employment and poverty among migrants.

Roland Verwiebe, Univ. Prof. Dr, is Full Professor of Social Stratification Research and Quantitative Methods at the University of Vienna, Austria. His research interests cover longitudinal and comparative research in the domains of social inequality, migration, labour market and European integration. Recent journal publications include work on cross-border mobility, transitional labour markets and educational inequalities, for example in the Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies, European Sociological Review and International Migration Review. Recent book publications include European Societies: Mapping Structure and Change (co-edited with Steffen Mau, Policy Press, 2010).

Christopher T. Whelan is an Emeritus Professor in the School of Sociology and the Geary Institute for Public Policy, University College Dublin, Ireland; an Associate Member of Nuffield College, Oxford, UK; a Research Affiliate at the Economic and Social Research Institute, Ireland; and a Member of the Royal Irish Academy. He was formerly Professor of Sociology in the School of Sociology, Social Policy and Social Work, Queen's University Belfast, UK; and Chair of the Standing Committee of the Social Sciences of the European Science Foundation and the European Consortium for Sociological Research. His research interests include the causes and consequences of poverty and inequality, social mobility and inequality. He has published extensively on these topics and on economic and social change in Ireland during bust and boom.

Jane Wills is Professor at the Centre for Geography, Environment and Society at the University of Exeter in Cornwall, UK. Her research interests focus on the changing geo-political economy of work, new forms of urban political alliances including community organizing and living wage campaigns, and the politics and practice of localism in the UK. She has published widely, including Locating Localism: Statecraft, Citizenship and Democracy (Policy Press, 2016), Global Cities at Work: New Migrant Divisions of Labour (Pluto Press, 2010), Threads of Labour: Garment Industry Supply Chains from the Workers' Perspective (Blackwell, 2005), Place, Space and the New Labour Internationalisms (Blackwell, 2001), Geographies of Economies (Arnold, 1997) and Union Retreat and the Regions (Routledge, 1996).

Ingrid Woolard is Dean and Professor of Economics at the University of Cape Town, South Africa; a Research Associate of the Southern Africa Labour and Development Research Unit (SALDRU); and a Research Fellow of the Institute for the Study of Labour (IZA). Her areas of interest include labour markets, social protection, fiscal policy and the measurement of poverty and inequality. Her work is firmly rooted in the analysis of household survey data and at the interface with policy-making.

Chung-Yang Yeh is an Assistant Professor at the Asia University, Taiwan. He received his PhD from the Division of Sociology, Social Policy and Criminology, University of Southampton, UK. His main research interests include comparative East Asian welfare states, welfare attitudes, pension policy and poverty studies. He has published journal articles and book chapters focusing on pension policies, social investment policies and in-work poverty in East Asia.