Acknowledgements

A volume of 37 chapters, involving 44 contributors, takes time and patience from all involved. So a first thank you goes to all our contributors, for the positive, collegial and enthusiastic engagement that this project has revealed. As editors we are also immensely grateful that the doyen of polar studies, Oran Young, was indeed kind enough to provide the Foreword to the volume.

At Edward Elgar Publishing, we thank our enthusiastic, professional editors: Chloe Mitchell and Jane Bayliss, alongside Alex O’Connell acting as our commissioning editor.

Klaus Dodds offers thanks to his colleagues and students on the MSc. Geopolitics and Security at Royal Holloway, University of London for their support and interest in the geopolitics of Antarctica. Long-term collaboration and friendship with his fellow editors has greatly enabled the finalization of this volume.

Alan Hemmings thanks colleagues on national and expert delegations to the meetings of the Antarctic Treaty System, and the staff of the Antarctic Treaty and CCAMLR secretariats, for insights into the practical politics of this system over three decades; discussions within the emerging Antarctic community of humanities and social science scholars, including SCAR’s Humanities and Social Sciences Expert Group and History Expert Group, whose joint meetings are a fruitful environment for new Antarctic thinking, and whose existence within SCAR promises a bridge across intellectual disciplines concerned with Antarctica. He records particular thanks to Chris Hemmings, for her untiring support and interest.

Peder Roberts extends thanks to colleagues within the SCAR History Expert Group, the SCAR Humanities and Social Sciences Expert Group, the History of Norwegian Polar Politics project, and the Polar Geopolitics seminar series, for their stimulating and always friendly collaboration over the years.
