
1. Introduction: overview of early expatriate studies, 1952 to 1979

Yvonne McNulty and Jan Selmer

Expatriation as a teaching and research subject has existed for more than 60 years. Although it is often assumed that the birth of expatriate studies occurred in the 1980s with publications by Rosalie Tung (1981, 1982, 1984a, 1984b, 1986, 1987, 1988a, 1988b) and J. Stewart Black (1988), or perhaps a little earlier with the now-seminal study by Anders Edstrom and Jay Galbraith (1977) about the reasons for using expatriates, a review of extant literature shows that a substantial body of expatriate research existed well before this time. While much of this early literature, and most especially pre-1970, was lacking in theoretical grounding and with only a few empirical studies published, it nonetheless provided an initial foundation upon which subsequent research and interest in expatriate studies would come to be based.

OVERVIEW OF EARLY EXPATRIATE STUDIES – 1952 TO 1979

The field of modern expatriate studies had its earliest beginnings at the turn of the century with Lay's (1925) exposé of expatriates in the Foreign Service. While the concept of working abroad in a professional capacity did not begin to be formally studied until the 1950s, it was borne out of research in the 1920s and 1930s that looked at personnel administration, for example, with the establishment of the Journal of Personnel Research in 1922, and the Society for Personnel Administration founded in 1937 (now the International Personnel Management Association/IPMA). There was also an ongoing interest during the 1940s about the acculturation of overseas military personnel during World War II (Henry, 1946) and the adjustment and repatriation of post-World War II populations (Leuba, 1942; Shils, 1946; Spicer, 1945).

Formal study of expatriates began in the 1950s (e.g., Fayerweather, 1959) with the publication of articles about their training (Lesser and Peter, 1957) and selection (see Mandell, 1958; Mandell and Greenberg, 1954; Woodruff, 1952), of which the latter appeared in two of the earliest practitioner-oriented human resource management (HRM) journals: Personnel Journal (1928–1996; formerly the Journal of Personnel Research from 1922 to 1927), known as Workforce Management since 1997; and Personnel Administration, superseded by Public Personnel Management in 1973. A set of studies in the same decade by Gouldner (1957, 1958), in Administrative Science Quarterly, suggested that differences found among two types of employees ('locals' and 'cosmopolitans') reflected a significant tension between an organization's simultaneous need for both loyalty and expertise;¹ the precursor to what would be adapted in a substantial body of research in later decades about expatriate commitment and turnover. One journal that focused more specifically on expatriates at this time was the International Executive (now Thunderbird International Business Review/TIBR), which in 1959 published some of the first articles about the expansion of American companies abroad, including the challenges associated with managing 'overseas executives' (see Crowther, 1959; Howell and Newman, 1959; Huson, 1959; Peter and Schlesinger, 1960; Thompson, 1959; Wallace, 1959).

¹ Gouldner (1957, 1958) explored differences in manifest and latent organizational identities among locals

The formal study of expatriates in the 1950s and 1960s undoubtedly arose from three correspondingly related topics for this time. The first was a keen interest in international business and multinational firms within the American management discipline by the likes of Dunning (1958), Penrose (1959), Perlmutter (1967, 1969) and others (e.g., Fayerweather, 1969; Fouraker and Stopford, 1968; Hall, 1960; Kindleberger, 1969; Kolde and Hill, 1967; Linfield, 1960; Robinson, 1964). A second impetus came from research on inter-cultural and cross-cultural transitions; see, for example, Lundstedt's (1963) special issue on cross-cultural research in the Journal of Social Issues (see also Baily and Kelman, 1962; Berry, 1969; Gullahorn and Gullahorn, 1963; Katz and Eisenstadt, 1960; Lysgaard, 1955; Moore, 1961; Nath, 1968; Oberg, 1951, 1960; Useem et al., 1963). A third topic was related to a burgeoning field of interest about foreign students' exchange programmes and their adjustment whilst abroad and upon returning home (e.g., Bennett, 1958; Coelho, 1962; du Bois, 1956; Lambert and Bressler, 1956; Morris, 1960; Schild, 1962; Scott, 1956; Selltitz and Cook, 1962; Sewell et al., 1954; Sewell and Davidsen, 1956; Veroff, 1963), most notably with Useem and Useem's (1955) book about Western-educated Indian students' return from study abroad.

While most of the topics that we study today may appear to have emerged only within the past 30 years (since the 1980s), many were in fact first observed, studied and published in the 1960s when expatriates began to be recognized as pivotal employees likely to foster organizations' growth into international markets. For example, although the Academy of Management Journal was launched in April 1958, partly in response to the advent of corporate globalization, the first article alluding to the concept of 'international management' was published with Neghandi and Estafen's (1965) paper about the transfer of 'American management know-how' to different cultures and environments. Research in the 1960s focused predominantly in key areas that we have since come to know well, including overseas personnel management (now international HRM: IHRM) (Myers, 1965), and expatriates' compensation (Bivens and Greene, 1969; Patton, 1962; Schollhammer, 1969), performance (Peter and Henry, 1962a), development (Chorafas, 1967), selection (Hodgson, 1963; Ivancevich, 1969a; Peter and Henry, 1962b; Steinmetz, 1965, 1966; Triandis, 1963), knowledge transfer (Negandhi and Estafen, 1965), culture shock and cross-cultural training (Byrnes, 1966; Chemers, 1968; Harrison and Hopkins, 1967), adjustment (Deutsch and Won, 1963; Nash, 1967), and success factors (Ivancevich, 1969b; Newton Parks, 1963; Vivian, 1968). Also emerging were a number of studies of expatriates in non-corporate settings (Campbell, 1969; Gordon, 1967; Hapgood and and cosmopolitans, finding that differences existed between each in terms of degrees of influence, participation, propensity to accept or reject organizational rules, and informal relations. The study was important because it explored dimensions of organizational loyalty, defining cosmopolitans as being low on loyalty to the employing organization, high on commitment to specialized role skills, and likely to use an outer reference group orientation; while locals were defined in the opposite way.

Bennett, 1969; Henry, 1965, 1966; Mischel, 1965; Porter and Mitchell, 1967; Smith et al., 1963; Taylor, 1968). Notable was that, well into the 1960s, much of the literature about expatriates referred to them in other terms: for example, as 'overseas Americans' (Cleveland et al., 1960), 'overseas personnel' (Stern, 1966), 'overseas executives' (Gonzalez and Negandhi, 1967; Haider, 1966) and 'international manager' (Kiernan, 1963).

A little known but striking feature of expatriate research in the 1960s is the launch of management journals that contributed greatly (then, as well as now) to supporting the publication of expatriate studies. Among them is Management International Review (founded in 1960) (see Borrmann, 1968; Megginson, 1967 as examples), Human Resource Management (launched in 1961) (see, e.g., Steinmetz, 1965, 1966), Columbia Journal of World Business (launched in 1965 and now Journal of World Business) (Haider, 1966; Vivian, 1968), and California Management Review (launched in 1958) (see Negandhi, 1966 as an example). Other articles about expatriates were simultaneously published in practitioner outlets; for example, with a slew of articles appearing in MSU Business Topics (e.g., Gonzalez, 1967; Hodgson, 1963; Murray, 1973; Root, 1968; Schollhammer, 1969), a journal published from 1967 to 1981 by the Graduate School of Business Administration at Michigan State University.

Although it likely went completely unnoticed, one of the first 'industry reports' was published in 1966 by Enid Baird Lovell of the National Industrial Conference Board (now The Conference Board), which appeared as a short write-up in the 'research roundup' section in the International Executive (now TIBR). The 248-page ground-breaking report was based on findings of a study of 150 companies and concluded that the trend towards 'global management structures' resembled little more than primary responsibilities for international activities being delegated (or relegated) to only one international executive.

While research in the 1950s and 1960s provided the initial impetus for expatriate studies, it was not until the 1970s that a solid base of empirical and theoretical research emerged to take the field forward into what it has become today. The launch of the Journal of International Business Studies in March 1970 saw the study of expatriates being fuelled by a broader interest among scholars about multinational enterprises (MNEs) (e.g., Boddewyn, 1979; Johanson and Vahlne, 1977; Stobaugh, 1970) and a specific interest in international business education (see Beazley and Folks, 1975; Daniels and Radebaugh, 1975; Janavaras, 1975), with the latter guiding the establishment of courses and programmes in this 'new, unmapped area' (Terpstra, 1970, p. 89). The focus of some of this research (including in other journals) centred on MNEs' international operations (Beer and Davis, 1976; Daniels et al., 1976; Hymer, 1976; Keegan, 1974; Ringbakk, 1972; Stopford and Wells, 1972), internationalization processes (Casson, 1979; Caves, 1971, 1974; Johanson and Wiedersheim-Paul, 1975), expansion efforts (Buckley et al., 1978; Donaghue, 1973; Holt, 1973, 1977; Rhodes, 1972; Vernon, 1971), industrial relations and trade unions (Roberts, 1972; Warner and Turner, 1972), and issues related to global staffing (Chruden and Sherman, 1972; Davis, 1979; Imundo, 1974; Lewis, 1971; Newman, 1970; Smith, 1974; Zeira, 1975). Other studies and commentaries explored international management practice more broadly (Baker and Ivancevich, 1970; Beeth, 1973; Desatnick and Bennett, 1977; Lewis, 1971; Voris, 1975), and expatriates more specifically (Egan, 1976; Hays, 1972; Shetty, 1971), including a number of lengthy articles appearing in Harvard Business Review extolling the challenges and opportunities of managing 'international executives' (Crafts, 1979; Foote, 1977; Heenan and Keegan, 1979; Perlmutter and Heenan, 1974; Sirota and Greenwood, 1971). It was in 1977 that the reasons why companies used expatriates began to be studied more theoretically, with the publication of Edström and Galbraith's now-famous article about the transfer of managers as a coordination and control strategy in multinational organizations, which appeared in Administrative Science Quarterly. Interestingly, while many scholars were suggesting an increase in the use of expatriates, others wrote about their doom, suggesting that:

[n]ot much can be done to save international executivism from disappearing gradually under the impact of growing nationalism, but companies with foreign affiliates can note the symptoms of a concerted push to discourage foreign managers and take some measures, discussed here, to prolong – possibly – the practice of placing foreign managers. (Howard, 1970, p. 11; in Human Resource Management)

Despite such gloomy predictions, research on expatriates continued to grow in the 1970s, with a small number of studies in non-corporate settings (Harris, 1973; Hautaluoma and Kaman, 1975; Kennedy and Dreger, 1974; Klineberg and Hull, 1979; Noer, 1974), and a much larger number of articles about corporate expatriates and their selection and recruitment (Alpander, 1973c; Baker and Ivancevich, 1971; Freemantle, 1978; Hays, 1974; Howard, 1974a; Lanier, 1979; Maddox, 1971; Miller, 1972a, 1972b; Teague, 1970; Tucker, 1974), communities (Cohen, 1977; Olden, 1979), satisfaction (Daniels, 1974; Ivancevich and Baker, 1970; Miller, 1975, 1976), families (Werkman, 1977) and compensation (Reynolds, 1997; Simone, 1979; Sonnabend, 1975; Whilte and McGowan, 1977). Critically, it was also when the first article to examine expatriate return on investment in terms of international assignment outcomes emerged as a new avenue of enquiry (see Misa and Fabricatore, 1979); a topic that would not be picked up again until the mid-2000s. Correspondingly, other empirical and conceptual studies emerged on themes that would come to dominate the field for decades to come, among them success and failure characteristics (Alpander, 1973b; Hays, 1971; Newman et al., 1978), expatriates' management styles (Alpander, 1973a, 1976), willingness to go (Miller and Cheng, 1978), performance (Stoner et al., 1972) and gender roles (Adler, 1979). During this time studies about repatriation strongly emerged as a worrying concern for MNEs (Cagney, 1975; Heenan, 1970; Howard, 1974b, 1979; Murray, 1973; Noer, 1974; Smith, 1976), thus initiating a long and extensive scholarly interest in a topic that still exists today.

The most significant topic of research to receive attention during the 1970s, and which would spawn a mass of research to come, was undoubtedly the theme of cross-cultural effectiveness (Hammer et al., 1978), including areas related to developing cross-cultural training programmes (Brein and David, 1973; Fiedler et al., 1971; Gudykunst et al., 1977; Howard, 1972; Jones, 1975; Thiagarajan, 1971; Zeira, 1979b) and improving expatriates' cross-cultural communication skills (Almaney, 1974). Another emerging topic that would similarly come to dominate the field was research about Japanese MNCs (Johnson, 1977; Pascale, 1978; Peterson and Schwind, 1977; Tsurumi, 1978; Yoshino, 1976), and Japanese management practices more broadly (e.g., Ozawa, 1979), the precursor to what would become a major focus of interest in Japanese subsidiaries in the 1980s and beyond, particularly by Black and colleagues (Black, 1988, 1990; Black and Gregersen, 1990).

During the nearly 30-year period from 1952 to 1979, the field of expatriate studies established a core group of early scholars whose names would become synonymous with research about 'international executives'. For example, Edwin Miller published a slew of empirical and theoretical articles about expatriate selection well into the 2000s (e.g., Miller, 1972a, 1976; Stahl et al., 2002) in some of the best journals (then, and now) including the Journal of International Business Studies (Miller, 1972b, 1975, 1977; Miller and Cattaneo, 1982), Management International Review (Miller et al., 1981; Miller and Cheng, 1978; Tung and Miller, 1990) and Academy of Management Journal (Miller, 1973). Yoram Zeira was similarly productive up until the 2000s (e.g., Izraeli et al., 1980; Zeira, 1975, 1976b; Zeira and Banai, 1984, 1985; Zeira et al., 2004) with a substantial number of publications covering topics that heretofore had not been previously researched, such as third country nationals (TCNs) (Zeira and Harari, 1977; see also Daniels, 1974), and host country nationals (HCNs) and subsidiary management within the context of expatriation and MNEs' internationalization efforts (Harari and Zeira, 1974; Zeira, 1976a, 1979a; Zeira and Banai, 1981, 1985; Zeira and Harari, 1979a, 1979b; Zeira et al., 1975; see also Daniels, 1973; Toyne, 1976). Although long forgotten today, we owe a debt of gratitude to Cecil Howard, John Ivancevich, Yoram Zeira, Anant Negandhi and Edwin Miller (among others) for pioneering early expatriate studies.

CONTENT AND OUTLINE OF THIS RESEARCH HANDBOOK

This is the first book to bring together expert researchers in the field of expatriate studies. The need for such a book is timely. The world is becoming smaller, with the international movement of individuals – as expatriates, business travellers, highly skilled workers and migrants – at an all time high. Expatriation is being increasingly researched and taught in business schools as part of broader and more general international human resource management (IHRM) and global business courses. Expatriates are increasing in their number and profile, with many different types, and many issues and challenges they must overcome. This Research Handbook of Expatriates brings together the work of some of the world's leading and up-and-coming scholars to present a solid overview of the field of expatriate studies to date, as well as to inform and excite future academic scholars and practitioners to the possibilities of conducting, collaborating on or utilizing research arising from expatriate studies.

Along with most scholars, we share a strong belief in the value of expatriate studies as a subject for study, teaching and research. We follow in the tradition of many others, in other fields and on other topics, to synthesize the body of research about expatriates to describe its history, their many types, and the various communities in which they live and work, as well as where future research can be directed. Several points are important to note regarding the focus of this Research Handbook. First, we make no apologies for the narrow focus only on expatriates (the people), as opposed to expatriation (the process). The latter has been covered well in prior handbooks (for example, Handbook of Research in International Human Resource Management, Stahl et al., 2012; The Routledge Companion to International Human Resource Management, Collings et al., 2015), whereas the former (to our knowledge) is yet to be tackled, with no handbook published that focuses specifically and only on expatriates and summarizes the literature as to how they experience living and working abroad. Notably, the distinction between expatriates and expatriation was one that we had to make again and again, even to authors in this Research Handbook as they refined and revised their chapters, such is the prevalence with which these two areas of enquiry are continually confused and/or combined. Our contribution to the broader field of IHRM is to make this distinction clearer.

Second, and related to the above, we imposed no restrictions on ourselves, as editors, in selecting chapter topics that ventured beyond corporate expatriates. Rather, we deliberately set out to find those authors who are specialists in non-corporate expatriation, including fields as diverse as the military, missionary, education, aid, diplomatic corps and sports. While we did not succeed in convincing some authors to contribute to the Research Handbook, we are pleased that most did; and the results are impressive for the breadth and depth of coverage. We are particularly proud to include these chapters in the Research Handbook to expand the field of expatriate studies beyond its traditional corporate perspective. This Research Handbook of Expatriates is thus an inaugural edition, of which we intend there will be more as we endeavour to fill these gaps.

Lastly, although this Research Handbook is focused on various types of expatriates and their experiences, we felt it was important to also include a section on researching expatriates. Here, we invited well-known scholars to write opinion pieces about their experiences when undertaking expatriate studies, including the pitfalls and problems they faced along the way. These are honest, first-person accounts of expatriate research in real time. We imposed no restrictions on how these authors might present their views or structure their chapters, being free to point out both the good and the bad, their successes and embarrassing fails, to critique the field as they felt might be necessary, and to provide sound advice. These voices are rarely heard in expatriate studies and we applaud the courage of these authors in taking up our challenge.

If there was to be only one important takeaway from this Research Handbook it is that there are many different types of expatriates, and their utilization is not meant to be a one-size-fits-all solution. Instead the research and case studies presented here are intended to provide researchers with options and ideas to consider, and theories and frameworks to adapt, in future studies. We believe that any researcher, regardless of their methodological preferences or discipline, will find value in the content this Research Handbook provides.

Part I: History of Expatriate Studies and Its Current State of Play

The first part of the book contains three chapters (including this one), which chart the history of expatriate studies from its inception in the 1950s to the present day. We believe that this part of the Research Handbook is somewhat unusual, if not entirely unique, on the basis that, unlike the typical format of review articles, we do not focus exclusively on seminal, 'famous' or high-citation studies but strive to give a thorough and balanced overview of the field from three entirely different perspectives. It begins in this chapter by us, the editors, with an overview of the early studies of expatriates from 1952 to 1979. In Chapter 2 by Yvonne McNulty and Chris Brewster, the authors provide an overview of the conceptual development of business expatriates over the past 50 years by clarifying the terms and concepts used to define them. The aim of the chapter is to establish greater construct clarity and to develop a theory-specific statement about business expatriates to guide future research. In Chapter 3 by Jan Selmer, a thematic history of expatriate studies is examined utilizing 55 years of research, from the 1960s to the 2010s, which identifies 1497 research articles and is categorized into 27 major themes and 22 minor themes, including 'hot' topics. This review shows that a few individuals have dominated the area of expatriate studies due to the development of research themes and specific personal circumstances. These three chapters combined provide potentially the most comprehensive and thorough review of expatriate studies to date. Each perspective allows the reader to consider not just how the field has evolved over the past 60 years, but also where it is likely to be going next, including the researchers who may be at the helm and leading the way.

Part II: Historical and Contemporary Foundations of Expatriate Studies

In Part II of the Research Handbook, the invited authors – all leaders in their specialty area – consider five important topics that constitute the historical and contemporary foundations of our field. In Chapter 4 by Thomas Hippler, Arno Haslberger and Chris Brewster, the authors argue for a reassessment of how we conceive of and study expatriate adjustment, by providing an overview of the theories and models of adjustment that have informed our thinking, and by offering an alternative model encompassing the dimensions, domains and dynamics of adjustment. In doing so, they raise questions about the meaning of adjustment and its contribution to the success of international assignments. In Chapter 5 by Leanda Care and Ross Donohue, the focus is on expatriate performance and includes a purposeful focus on the criterion space in terms of how it can be conceptualized and measured. The authors contend that the expatriate-specific performance components described in the literature be conceptualized as part of the overall context of the expatriate environment and in many cases are antecedent to, rather than components of, performance. In Chapter 6 by Lisa Clarke, Akhentoolove Corbin and Betty Jane Punnett, the leading authors in the area of expatriates to and from developed and developing countries discuss the limited literature on expatriates in this domain, by briefly considering the need for expatriates in the context of foreign direct investment (FDI), evidence of the growth in FDI between developed and developing countries, and differences between the two sets of countries as background to examining the literature on expatriates in this context. In Chapter 7 by David Collings and Michael Isichei, arguments are made for more research about the relationship between global talent management (GTM) and global mobility, particularly the implications of GTM for individual expatriates. The authors consider what GTM means for individual expatriates by using the expat cycle (pre-, during- and post-assignment stages) to consider how global talent systems impact upon the decisions individuals make around global mobility, their experiences while on assignment, and the career implications of global mobility in light of global talent systems. In Chapter 8 by Anthony Fee, we are introduced to the first comprehensive review of the research into the safety and security issues associated with expatriation and the management of expatriates. In a cutting-edge and concise format, the author elucidates the ways in which MNEs ensure the wellbeing of their expatriate staff when a crisis unfolds, using several illustrative case studies from a suite of recent empirical studies of MNCs with which the author has been involved.

Part III: Types of Expatriates

The six chapters in Part III review research on different types of expatriates to illustrate the increasing complexity surrounding their employment, adjustment, performance and reasons to expatriate. The emphasis here is to illustrate that expatriates exist in different forms, reflecting how the field of expatriate studies has evolved from its initial focus on only organizational or ‘traditional’ expatriates (white, Western and married males in their forties and fifties) to encompass a much broader range of employees. In Chapter 9 by Jan Selmer, Maike Andresen and Jean-Luc Cerdin, the focus is on self-initiated expatriates (SIEs). Here the authors enhance the conceptual coherence of the notion of an SIE by proposing a definition based on a set of conceptual criteria which differentiates SIEs from other types of expatriates and international movers. In Chapter 10 by Ruth McPhail, a thorough grounding in the issues faced by lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) assignees is provided, with the author arguing that, because LGBTI employees are often in more senior positions within management in proportion to their heterosexual counterparts and therefore in the top 10 per cent of talent often targeted for international assignments, more support from practitioners is needed to help them achieve their global mobility aspirations. In Chapter 11 by Miriam Moeller and B. Sebastian Reiche, the two leading scholars in this area provide a comprehensive and technical overview of inpatriates. They argue that inpatriates have received limited exposure in extant literature, and proceed to define and distinguish characteristics of an inpatriate from those possessed by an expatriate, including the rationale for their use, with theoretical underpinnings.

In Chapter 12 by Kate Hutchings and Snejina Michailova, we hear from the two leading scholars in this area about the issues and challenges facing female expatriates. The authors present a critique of the extant literature outlining the key themes that have attracted most scholarly attention, and offer suggestions for a more inclusive view of female expatriates. In Chapter 13 by Marian Crowley-Henry and Mary Collins, we are introduced to Millennial expatriates, the youngest expatriate employees in organizations today, who are likely to constitute 75 per cent of the global workforce by 2025. The purpose of this chapter is to familiarize readers with current research on Millennial expatriates and the recognized characteristics of this group, including how their competencies, motivations and expectations differ from those of previous generations. In Chapter 14 by Liisa Mäkelä, Kati Saarenpää and Yvonne McNulty, the authors examine international business travellers, short-term assignees and international commuters, and provide an extensive and much-needed clarification of these new forms of international working. They argue that international work within organizations is not a stable and uniform phenomenon and that new policies and practices acknowledging the specific features related to these new forms of work are necessary in order to meet the challenges of employees’ work-life stress.

Part IV: Expatriates in Diverse Communities

The fourth part of the Research Handbook is unique in bringing together scholars whose expertise lies outside the domain of corporate expatriate studies. Here, we searched far and wide for (sometimes unknown) authors who could bring new perspectives about expatriates in non-corporate (that is, diverse) communities beyond just the multinational. Ordinarily, many of these authors do not publish in the management literature where the majority of expatriate studies are found. Thus, their perspectives draw on literature that, until now, has likely not been seen in prior studies of expatriates. As the editors, we are especially proud of this part of the Research Handbook, not just for the added value that the perspectives bring, but also because the inclusion of these authors into the field is likely to spark a fresh wave of collaborations and expanded thinking about the possibilities for expatriate studies in the future.

In Chapter 15 by Kelly Fisher, a United States military veteran and Air Force culture and language fellow, we are introduced to the anything-but-ordinary world of military expatriates (MEs). While scholarly studies on the ME are limited, it is generally recognized that they face professional and personal challenges beyond the typical experience for the private sector expatriate: they must not only be proficient within their occupation, but they are also held to a higher standard of conduct as demanded by their extraordinary mandate by their nation to wage violence. Repatriation from a war zone also has specific challenges for both the serving member and their family, with substance abuse, suicide and domestic violence among them. In Chapter 16, Braam Oberholster and Cheryl Doss present a thorough and thoughtful overview of missionary (religious) expatriates. Here, the authors describe the mission worldview that creates a unique and dynamic context for expatriation researchers, including the various types of missionary expatriation such as traditional (frontier), professionally qualified, spouse, community development and humanitarian, tent maker, and business as mission. An extensive literature review focuses on member care topics including family adjustments, third culture kids (TCKs), host country re-entry and adjustment, care support, burnout, persecution and motivation.

In Chapter 17 by Jan Selmer, Jodie-Lee Trembath and Jakob Lauring, perspectives about expatriate academics are reviewed and critiqued, including their high non-organization-specific capital that makes them particularly mobile in the international academic labour market. Besides a definition of expatriate academics and their detailed descriptions (including university scholars, Fulbright and other scholarship holders, and other administrative individuals engaged in the tertiary education industry internationally), the chapter also features their demographic profile, motivations to move abroad, career-related risks of expatriation, experiences at the workplace and their work outcomes, theoretical development of the field, and the types of further research required. In Chapter 18, by sports migration scholars Harald Dolles and Birnir Egilsson, the top authors in the under-researched field of sports expatriates provide an insightful overview in which they argue that sport-related transfers embody unique features that arise from attachments to place, space and identities inherent in the sporting context. Using typologies of expatriates within the sports field, they show the various ways of becoming a self-initiated expatriate in sport (SIES) and suggest why more research is needed to investigate the specific IHRM challenges in professional team sports, the potentially controversial questions of labour rights and barriers, ethical approaches to international recruitment (including the under-age talent migration of 'star child athletes' as young as nine), and issues of integration, cultural adjustment and dislocation. We conclude this part of the Research Handbook with Chapter 19 by Anthony Fee, featuring a comprehensive and riveting review of expatriates in 'Aidland' by the leading scholar in this area. Here, the focus is on humanitarian aid and development workers, including clarification of some of the bewildering terminology, concepts and actors that populate the sector, as well as its operating context.

Part V: Researching Expatriates and Expatriates as Researchers

In the fifth part of the Research Handbook we explore how to conduct better expatriate research and suggest ways in which underutilized methodologies can be applied. Here, we showcase three opinion pieces by established scholars in our field, each with a substantial track record of undertaking and publishing expatriate studies, who were invited to share their expertise and to offer advice. In Chapter 20, Phyllis Tharenou presents her thoughts on methodological issues in expatriate studies. Using a sample of 296 empirical studies of assigned expatriates, SIEs and skilled migrants published from 2005 to 2014, comparative analyses revealed problems in construct clarity for the expatriate types, while systematic differences arose in the research paradigms employed. The author argues that research is needed to explain why researchers adopt different paradigms and whether their differences affect the results. Improvements are suggested for the research process and also to help end-users to access research results. In Chapter 21, Michael Dickmann adopts a biographical stance to share his views about conducting research for, and with, practitioners. Drawing upon a long history of personal reflections and recommendations as well as views from others who have collaborated in academic–industry projects, the author provides an insightful, practical and honest eight-step process model of academic–practitioner engagement that outlines a variety of considerations and provides recommendations for practice. Six distinct forms of academic–practitioner collaboration are presented.

In Chapter 22 we hear from Julia Richardson, where she explores the use of case studies in expatriate research and signals some of their potential advantages and challenges. By drawing on published work in the field, the author highlights the criteria for ensuring rigour in expatriate case study research, examining how those criteria might be incorporated into study design, execution and subsequent writing and publication of results and professional practice, as well as themes relating to external, conceptual and internal validity.

Part VI: Future Directions in Expatriate Research

In the sixth and final part of the Research Handbook, three important topics are introduced and summarized with a view to providing food for thought for future expatriate studies. In Chapter 23, Kathrin Hanek presents an extensive technical review of the research on biculturals, monoculturals and Adult Third Culture Kids (ATCKs) in the context of working globally. Drawing from psychological research and empirical work, the author provides an overview of the complexities around defining identity in a global context among these groups. By integrating findings across various literatures, an identity–processes–adjustment framework is presented for understanding how individual differences in identity patterns and identity management strategies produce different adjustment outcomes. In Chapter 24, Min Wan, Romila Singh and Margaret Shaffer provide an overview and summary of the relatively scarce, divergent and poorly organized research on global families. Using a summary of the literature to develop a 2 x 2 typology that reflects the traditional and non-traditional forms of global employment and family structure, the authors define the term ‘global family’ and offer an agenda for future research on the role and experiences of global families. In Chapter 25 we, the editors, conclude the Research Handbook with a co-authored account of our combined experiences for successfully publishing expatriate research. The chapter is designed to give voice to perspectives about publishing for PhD candidates and early career researchers by providing a step-by-step guide that discusses the publish-or-perish dilemma, work–family challenges for female academics, what research on expatriates is most needed, the peer-review system, selecting co-authors, building a publishing pipeline, the practice of writing, and learning to embrace rejection. The chapter also provides an extensive list of references of the best books, articles, chapters, editorials and commentaries in the field of management and expatriate studies about writing and publishing.

CONCLUSION

This introductory chapter illustrates that the field of expatriate studies is becoming (if not already) both a necessary and a dominant area of research in the broader fields of IHRM, international business and international management. While institutional perspectives have dominated much of the early research as MNEs attempted to come to grips with their need to internationalize, over time it is the individual actors engaged in the process of expatriating – expatriate employees – that have become the central stakeholders in ensuring MNEs could meet their globalization objectives. Thus, whether one has a preference for organizational- or individual-level research, the fact remains that expatriate studies is at the centre of the global staffing discipline and is here to stay. We believe that the large and comprehensive body of work that is presented here, and which is written by both good and great scholars in the field of expatriate studies, provides an important foundation for future studies of expatriates.

REFERENCES

- Adler, N. (1979), 'Women as adrogynous managers: A conceptualization of the potential for American women in international management', International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 3(4), 407–436.
- Almaney, A. (1974), 'Intercultural communications and the MNC executive', Columbia Journal of World Business, 9(4), 23–28.
- Alpander, G. (1973a), 'Changing patterns in quantitative decision-making techniques of expatriate managers', Academy of Management Proceedings, 1, 131–137.
- Alpander, G. (1973b), 'Drift to authoritarianism: The changing managerial styles of the US executive overseas', Journal of International Business Studies, 4(2), 1–14.
- Alpander, G. (1973c), 'Foreign MBA: Potential managers for American international corporations', Journal of International Business Studies, 4(1), 1–13.
- Alpander, G. (1976), 'Use of quantitative methods in international operations by US overseas executives', Management International Review, 16(1), 71–77.
- Bailyn, L. and H. Kelman (1962), 'The effects of a year's experience in America on the self-image of Scandinavians: A preliminary analysis of reactions to a new environment', Journal of Social Issues, 18(1), 30–40.
- Baker, J. and J. Ivancevich (1970), 'Multinational management with American expatriates', Economic and Business Bulletin, 23(1), 35–39.
- Baker, J. and J. Ivancevich (1971), 'The assignment of American executives abroad: Systematic, haphazard, or chaotic?', California Management Review, 13(3), 39–44.
- Beazley, G. and W. Folks (1975), 'Development and initiation of a Master in international business studies', Journal of International Business Studies, 6(1), 99–106.
- Beer, M. and S. Davis (1976), 'Creating a global organizational strategy', Administrative Science Quarterly, 13(1), 47–64.

- Beeth, Gunnar (1973), International Management Practice: An Insider's View, New York: AMACOM.
- Bennett, John W. (1958), In Search of Identity: The Japanese Overseas Scholar in America and Japan, Minneapolis, MN: University of Minnesota Press.
- Berry, J. (1969), 'On cross-cultural comparability', International Journal of Psychology, 4(2), 119–128.
- Bivens, Karen Krauss and James Greene (1969), Compensation of Overseas Managers, New York: National Industrial Conference Board.
- Black, J. Stewart (1988), 'Work role transitions: A study of American expatriate managers in Japan', Journal of International Business Studies, 19(2), 277–294.
- Black, J. Stewart (1990), 'The relationship of personal characteristics with the adjustment of Japanese expatriate managers', Management International Review, 30(2), 119–134.
- Black, J. Stewart and H. Gregersen (1990), 'Expectations, satisfaction, and intention to leave of American expatriate managers in Japan', International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 14(4), 485–506.
- Boddewyn, J. (1979), 'Foreign divestment: Magnitude and factors', Journal of International Business Studies, 10(1), 21–26.
- Borrmann, W. (1968), 'The problem of expatriate personnel and their selection in international enterprises', Management International Review, 8(4–5), 37–48.
- Brein, M. and K. David (1973), Improving Cross-Cultural Training and Measurement of Cross-Cultural Learning, Vol. 1, Denver, CO: Center for Research and Education.
- Buckley, Peter J., Greg D. Newbold and Jane C. Thurwell (1978), 'Going international – the foreign direct investment behaviour of smaller UK firms', University of Reading, Department of Economics.
- Byrnes, C. (1966), 'Role shock: An occupational hazard of American technical assistants abroad', Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 368(1), 95–108.
- Cagney, W. (1975), 'Executive re-entry: The problems of repatriation', Personnel Journal, 53(9), 487–488.
- Campbell, R. (1969), 'United States military training for cross-cultural interaction', Office of Naval Research, June.
- Casson, Mark (1979), Alternatives to the Multinational Enterprise, London: Macmillan.
- Caves, R. (1971), 'International corporations: The industrial economics of foreign investment', Economica, 38(149), 1–27.
- Caves, R. (1974), 'Multinational firms, competition and productivity in host country markets', Economica, 41(162), 176–193.
- Chemers, M. (1968), 'Cross-cultural training as a means for improving situational favourableness', Human Relations, 22(6), 531–546.
- Chorafas, D. (1967), 'Developing the international executive', AMA Research Study, New York: American Management Association.
- Chruden, H.J. and A.W. Sherman Jr (1972), Personnel Practices of American Companies in Europe, New York: American Management Association.
- Cleveland, H., C.J. Mangone and J.C. Adams (1960), 'The overseas Americans', International Executive, 2(3), 5–6.
- Coelho, G. (1962), 'Personal growth and educational development through working and studying abroad', Journal of Social Issues, 18(1), 55–67.
- Cohen, E. (1977), 'Expatriate communities', Current Sociology, 24(23), 5–133.
- Collings, David, Geoffrey T. Wood and Paula M. Caligiuri (2015), The Routledge Companion to International Human Resource Management, London: Routledge.
- Crafts, P. (1979), 'Overseas trips for executives', Harvard Business Review, 57(6), 28–37.
- Crowther, F. (1959), 'Organizing for overseas operations', International Executive, 1(2), 13–14.
- Daniels, J. (1973), 'A profile of local subsidiary managers', Academy of Management Journal, 16(4), 695–700.
- Daniels, J. (1974), 'The non-American manager, especially as third country national, in US multinationals: A separate but equal doctrine?', Journal of International Business Studies, 5(2), 25–40.
- Daniels, John D., Ernest W. Ogram and Lee H. Radebaugh (1976), International Business: Environments and Operations, Vol. 10, Boston, MA: Addison-Wesley.
- Daniels, J. and L. Radebaugh (1975), 'The involvement of international business education', Journal of International Business Studies, 6(1), 79–89.
- Davis, Stanley M. (1979), 'Trends in the organization of multinational corporations', in Stanley M. Davis (ed.), Managing and Organising Multinational Corporations, New York: Pergamon Press, pp. 231–248.
- Desatnick, Raymond and M.L. Bennett (1977), Human Resource Management in the Multinational Company, Farnborough: Gower Press.
- Deutsch, S. and G. Won (1963), 'Some factors in the adjustment of foreign nationals in the United States', Journal of Social Issues, 19(3), 115–122.
- Donaghue, H. (1973), 'Control Data's joint venture in Romania', Columbia Journal of World Business, 8(4), 83–89.
- Du Bois, Cora (1956), Foreign Students and Higher Education in the United States, Washington, DC: American Council on Education.

- Dunning, John (1958), American Investment in British Manufacturing Industry, London: George Allen & Unwin.
- Edström, A. and J. Galbraith (1977), 'Transfer of managers as a coordination and control strategy in multinational organisations', Administrative Science Quarterly, 22(2), 248–263.
- Egan, M. (1976), 'Exploring the expatriate's world', Personnel Management, 8(7), 25–29.
- Fayerweather, John (1959), The Executive Overseas, New York: Syracuse University Press.
- Fayerweather, John (1969), International Business Management: A Conceptual Framework, New York: McGraw-Hill.
- Fiedler, F., T. Mitchell and H. Triandis (1971), 'The culture assimilator: An approach to cross-cultural training', Journal of Applied Psychology, 55(2), 95–102.
- Footo, M. (1977), 'Controlling the cost of international compensation', Harvard Business Review, 55(6), 123–132.
- Fouraker, L. and J. Stopford (1968), 'Organizational structure and the multinational strategy', Administrative Science Quarterly, 13(1), 47–64.
- Freemantle, D. (1978), 'Foreign assignment: A recruiter's nightmare', Personnel Management, 10(10), 33–37.
- Gonzalez, R. (1967), 'Expatriates', MSU Business Topics, 15(2), 69–73.
- Gonzalez, Richard F. and Anant R. Negandhi (1967), The United States Overseas Executive: His Orientations and Career Patterns, East Lansing, MI: Michigan State University.
- Gordon, L. (1967), 'Clinical, psychometric, and work-sample approaches in the prediction of success in Peace Corps training', Journal of Applied Psychology, 51(2), 111–119.
- Gouldner, A. (1957), 'Cosmopolitans and locals: Toward an analysis of latent social roles – I', Administrative Science Quarterly, 2(3), 281–306.
- Gouldner, A. (1958), 'Cosmopolitans and locals: Toward an analysis of latent social roles – II', Administrative Science Quarterly, 2(4), 281–306.
- Gudykunst, W., M. Hammer and R. Wiseman (1977), 'An analysis of an integrated approach to cross-cultural training', International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 1(2), 99–110.
- Gullahorn, J. and J. Gullahorn (1963), 'An extension of the U-curve hypothesis', Journal of Social Sciences, 19(3), 33–47.
- Haider, M. (1966), 'Tomorrow's executive: A man for all countries', Columbia Journal of World Business, 2(1), 106–113.
- Hall, E.T. (1960), 'The silent language in overseas business', Harvard Business Review, 38(3), 87–96.
- Hammer, M., W. Gudykunst and R. Wiseman (1978), 'Dimensions of intercultural effectiveness: An exploratory study', International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 2(4), 382–393.
- Hapgood, David and Meridan Bennett (1969), Agents of Change: A Close Look at the Peace Corps, Boston, MA: Little, Brown & Co.
- Harari, E. and Y. Zeira (1974), 'Moral problems in non-American multinational corporations in the United States', Management International Review, 14(6), 43–57.
- Harris, J. (1973), 'A science of the South Pacific: Analysis of the character structure of the Peace Corps volunteer', American Psychologist, 28(3), 232–247.
- Harrison, R. and R. Hopkins (1967), 'The design of cross-cultural training', Journal of Applied Behavioural Science, 3(4), 431–460.
- Hautaluoma, J. and V. Kaman (1975), 'Description of Peace Corps volunteers' experiences in Afghanistan', Topics in Culture Learning, 3(1), 79–96.
- Hays, R. (1971), 'Ascribed behavioral determinants of success–failure among US expatriate managers', Journal of International Business Studies, 2(1), 40–46.
- Hays, R. (1972), 'The executive abroad', Business Horizons, 15(3), 87–93.
- Hays, R. (1974), 'Expatriate selection: Insuring success and avoiding failure', Journal of International Business Studies, 5(1), 25–38.
- Heenan, D. (1970), 'The corporate expatriate: Assignment to ambiguity', Columbia Journal of World Business, 5(3), 49–54.
- Heenan, D. and W. Keegan (1979), 'The rise of third world internationals', Harvard Business Review, 57(2), 101–109.
- Henry, E. (1965), 'What business can learn from Peace Corps selection and training', Personnel Journal, 42(4), 17–25.
- Henry, E. (1966), 'Lessons from Peace Corps selection and training', International Executive, 8(1), 9–10.
- Henry, J. (1946), 'Initial reactions to the Americans in Japan', Journal of Social Issues, 2(3), 19–25.
- Hodgson, F.X. (1963), 'The selection of overseas management', MSU Business Topics, 11(2), 49–54.
- Holt, J. (1973), 'New roles for Western multinationals in Eastern Europe', Columbia Journal of World Business, 8(3), 131–139.
- Holt, J. (1977), 'Industrial cooperation in Eastern Europe: Strategies of US agricultural and construction equipment companies', Columbia Journal of World Business, 12(1), 80–89.
- Howard, C. (1970), 'International executives: A look into the 21st century', Human Resource Management, 9(1), 11–70.

- Howard, C. (1972), 'Model for an international management development program', Training and Development Journal, 26(9), 20–25.
- Howard, C. (1974a), 'Model for the design of a selection program for multinational executives', Public Personnel Management, 3(2), 138–145.
- Howard, C. (1974b), 'The returning overseas executive – culture shock in reverse', Human Resource Management, 13(2), 22–26.
- Howard, C. (1979), 'Integrating returning expatriates into the domestic organisation', Personnel Administrator, 24(1), 61–65.
- Howell, M. and S. Newman (1959), 'How we should train for overseas posts', International Executive, 1(1), 21–22.
- Huson, G. (1959), 'How a foreign subsidiary can win friends in Canada', International Executive, 1(1), 17–18.
- Hymer, Stephen (1976), The International Operations of National Firms: A Study of Direct Foreign Investment, Vol. 14, Cambridge, MA: MIT Press.
- Imundo, L. (1974), 'Problems associated with managerial mobility', Personnel Journal, 53(12), 910–914.
- Ivancevich, J. (1969a), 'Selection of American managers for overseas assignments', Personnel Journal, 48(3), 180–183.
- Ivancevich, J. (1969b), 'Perceived need satisfactions of domestic versus overseas managers', Journal of Applied Psychology, 53(4), 274–278.
- Ivancevich, J. and J. Baker (1970), 'A comparative study of the satisfaction of domestic United States managers and overseas United States managers', Academy of Management Journal, 13(1), 69–77.
- Izraeli, D., M. Banai and Y. Zeira (1980), 'Women executives in subsidiaries of multinational corporations', California Management Review, 23(1), 53–63.
- Janavaras, B. (1975), 'Graduate education in international business: Quo modo?', Journal of International Business Studies, 6(1), 91–98.
- Johanson, J. and J.-E. Vahlne (1977), 'The internationalization process of the firm: A model of knowledge development and increasing foreign market commitments', Journal of International Business Studies, 8(1), 23–32.
- Johanson, J. and F. Wiedersheim-Paul (1975), 'The internationalisation process of the firm: Four Swedish cases', Journal of Management Studies, 12(3), 305–322.
- Johnson, R. (1977), 'Success and failure of Japanese subsidiaries in America', Columbia Journal of World Business, 12(1), 30–37.
- Jones, L. (1975), 'Training in the jungle – CALTEX style', Education + Training, 17(1–2), 45–48.
- Katz, E. and S. Eisenstadt (1960), 'Some sociological observations on the response of Israeli organizations to new immigrants', Administrative Science Quarterly, 5(1), 113–133.
- Keegan, W. (1974), 'Multinational scanning: A study of the information sources utilized by headquarters executives in multinational companies', Administrative Science Quarterly, 19(3), 411–421.
- Kennedy, P. and R. Dreger (1974), 'Development of criterion measures of overseas missionary performance', Journal of Applied Psychology, 59(1), 69–73.
- Kiernan, P. (1963), 'What it takes to be a successful international manager', International Executive, 5(4), 1–4.
- Kindleberger, Charles P. (1969), American Business Abroad: Six Lectures on Direct Investment, New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
- Klineberg, Otto and Frank W. Hull (1979), At a Foreign University: An International Study of Adaptation and Coping, New York: Praeger Publishers.
- Kolde, E. and R. Hill (1967), 'Conceptual and normative aspects of international management', Academy of Management Journal, 10(2), 119–128.
- Lambert, Richard D. and Marvin Bressler (1956), Indian Students on an American Campus, Minneapolis, MN: University of Minnesota Press.
- Lanier, A.R. (1979), 'Selecting and preparing personnel for overseas transfers', Personnel Journal, 58(3), 160–163.
- Lay, Tracy H. (1925), The Foreign Service of the United States, New York: Prentice Hall.
- Lesser, Simon O. and Hollis W. Peter (1957), 'Training foreign nationals in the United States', in Rensis Likert and Samuel P. Hayes (eds), Some Applications of Behavioural Research, Basel: UNESCO.
- Leuba, C. (1942), 'Psychological aspects of international reconstruction', Journal of Applied Psychology, 26(4), 439–447.
- Lewis, Brian (1971), Overseas Assignments: The Treatment of Expatriate Staff, London: Institute of Personnel Management.
- Linfield, S. (1960), 'Looking around: Overseas operations', International Business Management, Sept, 247–256.
- Lovell, Enid Baird (1966), The Changing Role of the International Executive, New York: National Industrial Conference Board.
- Lundstedt, S. (1963), 'An introduction to some evolving problems in cross-cultural research', Journal of Social Issues, 19(3), 1–9.

- Lysgaard, S. (1955), 'Adjustment in a foreign country: Norwegian Fulbright grantees visiting the United States', International Social Sciences Bulletin, 7(1), 45–51.
- Maddox, R. (1971), 'Problems and trends in assigning managers overseas', Personnel Journal, 48(1), 53–56.
- Mandell, M.M. (1958), 'Selecting Americans for overseas assignments', Journal of American Society for Personnel Administration, 21(6), 25–30.
- Mandell, M.M. and S.H. Greenberg (1954), 'Selecting Americans for overseas employment', Personnel Journal, 32(3), 356–366.
- Megginson, L. (1967), 'The interrelationship and interaction between the cultural environment and managerial effectiveness', Management International Review, 7(6), 65–70.
- Miller, E. (1972a), 'The overseas assignment: How managers determine who is selected', Michigan Business Review, 24(3), 12–19.
- Miller, E. (1972b), 'The selection decision for an international assignment: A study of the decision maker's behavior', Journal of International Business Studies, 3(2), 49–65.
- Miller, E. (1973), 'The international selection decision: A study of some dimensions of managerial behavior in the selection decision process', Academy of Management Journal, 16(2), 239–252.
- Miller, E. (1975), 'The job satisfaction of expatriate American managers: A function of regional location and previous international work experience', Journal of International Business Studies, 6(2), 65–73.
- Miller, E. (1976), 'Regional location and international work experience as correlates of the job-satisfaction of expatriate American managers', Journal of Economics and Business, 28(2), 121–127.
- Miller, E. (1977), 'Managerial qualifications of personnel occupying overseas management positions as perceived by American expatriate managers', Journal of International Business Studies, 8(1), 57–69.
- Miller, E., B. Bhatt, B. Kumar, R.J. Cattaneo and R. Hill (1981), 'Influence of expatriate nationality and regional location of the overseas subsidiary on participative decision making', Management International Review, 21(3), 31–46.
- Miller, E. and R.J. Cattaneo (1982), 'Some leadership attitudes of West German expatriate managerial personnel', Journal of International Business Studies, 13(1), 39–50.
- Miller, E. and J. Cheng (1978), 'A closer look at the decision to accept an overseas position', Management International Review, 18(3), 25–33.
- Misa, K. and J. Fabricatore (1979), 'Return on investment of overseas personnel', Financial Executive, 47(4), 42–46.
- Mischel, W. (1965), 'Predicting the success of Peace Corps volunteers in Nigeria', Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, 1(5), 517–520.
- Moore, Frank W. (1961), Readings in Cross-Cultural Methodology, New Haven, CT: Burns & McEachern.
- Morris, Richard T. (1960), The Two-Way Mirror: National Status in Foreign Students' Adjustment, Minneapolis, MN: University of Minnesota Press.
- Murray, J. (1973), 'International personnel repatriation: Culture shock in reverse', MSU Business Topics, 21(3), 59–66.
- Myers, A. (1965), 'Personnel management overseas', Personnel Administration, 26(3), 34–41.
- Nash, D. (1967), 'The fate of Americans in a Spanish setting: A study of adaptation', Human Organization, 26(3), 157–163.
- Nath, R. (1968), 'A methodological review of cross-cultural management research', International Social Science Journal, 20(1), 35–62.
- Negandhi, A. (1966), 'Profile of the American overseas executive', California Management Review, 9(2), 57–64.
- Negandhi, A. and B. Estafen (1965), 'A research model to determine the applicability of American management know-how in differing cultures and/or environments', Academy of Management Journal, 8(4), 309–318.
- Newman, J., B. Bhatt and T. Gutteridge (1978), 'Determinants of expatriate effectiveness: A theoretical and empirical vacuum', Academy of Management Review, 3(3), 655–661.
- Newman, W. (1970), 'Is management exportable?', Columbia Journal of World Business, 5(1), 7–18.
- Newton Parks, F. (1963), 'Executive trouble abroad', International Executive, 5(4), 5–6.
- Noer, D. (1974), 'Integrating foreign service employees to home organization: The Godfather approach', Personnel Journal, 53(1), 45–51.
- Oberg, K. (1951), 'Culture shock', in Cora du Bois (ed.), Panel presentation at Midwest regional meeting of the Institute of International Education, Chicago, IL, 28 November.
- Oberg, K. (1960), 'Cultural shock: Adjustment to new cultural environments', Practical Anthropology, 7(4), 177–182.
- Olden, A. (1979), 'Expatriates', Library Review, 28(4), 247–253.
- Ozawa, T. (1979), 'International investment and industrial structure: New theoretical implications from the Japanese experience', Oxford Economic Papers, 31(1), 72–92.
- Pascale, R. (1978), 'Personnel practices and employee attitudes: A study of Japanese American-managed firms in the United States', Human Relations, 31(7), 547–615.
- Patton, A. (1962), 'Executive compensation here and abroad', Harvard Business Review, 40(5), 144.

- Penrose, Edith T. (1959), The Theory of the Growth of the Firm, Oxford: Blackwell / Oxford University Press.
- Perlmutter, H. (1967), 'Social architectural problems of the multinational firm', Quarterly Journal of AIESEC International, 10(2), 14–16.
- Perlmutter, H. (1969), 'The tortuous evolution of the multinational corporation', Journal of World Business, 4(1), 9–18.
- Perlmutter, H. and D. Heenan (1974), 'How multinational should your top managers be?', Harvard Business Review, 52(6), 121–132.
- Peter, H. and E. Henry (1962a), 'Measuring successful performance overseas', International Executive, 4(1), 17–18.
- Peter, H. and E. Henry (1962b), 'Steps to better selection and training for overseas jobs', Personnel Journal, 39(1), 18–25.
- Peter, H. and L. Schlesinger (1960), 'Using US training in the Philippines', International Executive, 2(3), 11–12.
- Peterson, R. and H. Schwind (1977), 'A comparative study of personnel problems in international companies and joint ventures in Japan', Journal of International Business Studies, 8(1), 45–56.
- Porter, L. and V. Mitchell (1967), 'Comparative study of need satisfactions in military and business hierarchies', Journal of Applied Psychology, 51(2), 139–144.
- Reynolds, C. (1997), 'Expatriate compensation in historical perspective', Journal of World Business, 32(2), 118–132.
- Rhodes, J. (1972), 'US investment abroad: Who's going where, how and why', Columbia Journal of World Business, 7(4), 33–40.
- Ringbakk, K. (1972), 'The corporate planning life cycle – An international point of view', Long Range Planning, 5(3), 10–20.
- Roberts, Benjamin C. (1972), 'Factors influencing the organization and style of management and their effect on the pattern of industrial relations in multinational corporations', in Hans Gunter (ed.), Transnational Industrial Relations, London: Macmillan, pp.121–137.
- Robinson, R. (1964), 'International business policy', International Executive, 6(2), 1–5.
- Root, F. (1968), 'United States business abroad and political risks', MSU Business Topics, 16(1), 73–80.
- Schild, E. (1962), 'The foreign student, as stranger, learning the norms of the host-culture', Journal of Social Issues, 18(1), 41–54.
- Schollhammer, H. (1969), 'Compensation of international executives', MSU Business Topics, 17(1), 19–30.
- Scott, Franklin D. (1956), The American Experience of Swedish Students: Retrospect and Aftermath, Minneapolis, MN: University of Minnesota Press.
- Selltiz, C. and S. Cook (1962), 'Factors influencing attitudes of foreign students towards the host country', Journal of Social Issues, 18(1), 7–23.
- Sewell, W., R. Morris and O. Davidsen (1954), 'Scandinavian students' images of the United States: A study in cross-cultural education', ANNALS of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 295(1), 126–135.
- Sewell, W. and O. Davidsen (1956), 'The adjustment of Scandinavian students', Journal of Social Issues, 12(1), 9–19.
- Shetty, Y. (1971), 'International manager: A role profile', Management International Review, 11(4), 19–25.
- Shils, E. (1946), 'Social and psychological aspects of displacement and repatriation', Journal of Social Issues, 2(3), 3–18.
- Simone, V. (1979), 'The international pension world – US expatriate', Pension World, 15(12), 8–9.
- Sirota, D. and J. Greenwood (1971), 'Understand your overseas workforce', Harvard Business Review, 49(1), 53–60.
- Smith, J. (1974), 'Another peril for expatriate managers', International Management, 29(1), 37–38.
- Smith, L. (1976), 'The hazards of coming home', International Executive, 18(1), 34–35.
- Smith, M., J. Fawcett, R. Ezekiel and S. Roth (1963), 'A factorial study of morale among Peace Corps teachers in Ghana', Journal of Social Issues, 19(3), 10–32.
- Sonnabend, H. (1975), 'Tax-planning for overseas employees', Practical Accountant, 8(4), 163–165.
- Spicer, E. (1945), 'Comments on current problems of Japanese–American adjustment', Journal of Social Issues, 1(2), 28–29.
- Stahl, Günter, Ingmar Björkman and Shad Morris (2012), Handbook of Research in International Human Resource Management, Cheltenham, UK and Northampton, MA, USA: Edward Elgar Publishing.
- Stahl, G., E. Miller and R. Tung (2002), 'Toward the boundaryless career: A closer look at the expatriate career concept and the perceived implications of an international assignment', Journal of World Business, 37(3), 216–227.
- Steinmetz, L. (1965), 'Selecting managers for international operations: The wife's role', Human Resource Management, 4(1), 26–29.
- Steinmetz, L. (1966), 'Cutting foreign managers from the domestic herd', Human Resource Management, 5(3), 11–16.

- Stern, A.H. (1966), 'Selection of overseas personnel', Personnel Journal, 45(4), 224–228.
- Stobaugh, R. (1970), 'Financing foreign subsidiaries of US-controlled multinational enterprises', Journal of International Business Studies, 1(1), 43–64.
- Stoner, J., J. Aram and I. Rubin (1972), 'Factors associated with effective performance in overseas work assignments', Personnel Psychology, 25(2), 303–318.
- Stopford, John M. and Louis Truitt Wells Jr (1972), Managing the Multinational Enterprise: Organization of the Firm and Ownership of the Subsidiary, New York: Basic Books.
- Taylor, A. (1968), 'The selection of NZ volunteers for service abroad: an appraisal of the first five years', Personnel Psychology, 21(3), 345–357.
- Teague, F.A. (1970), 'International management selection and development', California Management Review, 12(3), 1–6.
- Terpstra, V. (1970), 'University education for international business', Journal of International Business Studies, 1(1), 89–96.
- Thiagarajan, K. (1971), 'Cross-cultural training for overseas management', Management International Review, 4–5(1), 69–85.
- Thompson, D. (1959), 'Contracts for Americans working abroad', International Executive, 1(1), 19–20.
- Toyne, B. (1976), 'Host country managers of multinational firms: An evaluation of variables affecting their managerial thinking patterns', Journal of International Business Studies, 7(1), 39–56.
- Triandis, H. (1963), 'Factors affecting employee selection in two cultures', Journal of Applied Psychology, 47(2), 89–96.
- Tsurumi, Y. (1978), 'The best of times and the worst of times: Japanese management in America', Columbia Journal of World Business, 13(2), 56–61.
- Tucker, M. (1974), 'Screening and selection for overseas assignments: Assessment and recommendations to the US Navy', Center for Research and Education, July.
- Tung, R. (1981), 'Selection and training of personnel for overseas assignments', Columbia Journal of World Business, 16(1), 68–78.
- Tung, R. (1982), 'Selection and training procedures of US, European, and Japanese multinationals', California Management Review, 25(1), 57–71.
- Tung, R. (1984a), 'Human resource planning in Japanese multinationals: A model for US firms?', Journal of International Business Studies, 15(2), 139–149.
- Tung, R. (1984b), 'Strategic management of human resources in the multinational enterprise', Human Resource Management, 23(2), 129–143.
- Tung, R. (1986), 'Corporate executives and their families in China: The need for cross-cultural understanding in business', Columbia Journal of World Business, 21(1), 21–25.
- Tung, R. (1987), 'Expatriate assignments: Enhancing success and minimizing failure', Academy of Management Executive, 1(2), 117–126.
- Tung, R. (1988a), 'Career issues in international assignments', Academy of Management Executive, 11(3), 241–244.
- Tung, Rosalie (1988b), The New Expatriates: Managing Human Resources Abroad, Cambridge, MA: Ballinger.
- Tung, R. and E. Miller (1990), 'Managing in the twenty-first century: The need for global orientation', Management International Review, 30(1), 5–19.
- Useem, John and Ruth Hill Useem (1955), The Western-Educated Man in India: A Study of His Social Roles and Influence, Oakbrook, IL: Dryden Press.
- Useem, J., R. Useem and J. Donoghue (1963), 'Men in the middle of the third culture: the roles of American and non-Western people in cross-cultural administration', Human Organization, 22(3), 169–179.
- Vernon, R. (1971), 'Sovereignty at bay: The multinational spread of US enterprises', International Executive, 13(4), 1–3.
- Veroff, J. (1963), 'African students in the United States', Journal of Social Issues, 19(3), 48–60.
- Vivian, J. (1968), 'Expatriate executives: Overpaid but undercompensated', Columbia Journal of World Business, 3(1), 29–40.
- Voris, W. (1975), 'Considerations in staffing for overseas management needs', Personnel Journal, 54(6), 332–333.
- Wallace, W. (1959), 'How to maintain productive working relationships with overseas managers', International Executive, 1(2), 17–18.
- Warner, M. and L. Turner (1972), 'Trade unions and the multinational firm', Journal of Industrial Relations, 14(2), 143–170.
- Werkman, S.L. (1977), Bringing Up Children Overseas: A Guide for Families, New York: Basic Books.
- Whilte, W. and J. McGowan (1977), 'Expatriate compensation at the crossroads', Advanced Management Journal, 42(4), 14–22.
- Woodruff, E. (1952), 'Selection of personnel for overseas employment – a review of the literature', Personnel Administration, 15, 20–24.
- Yoshino, Michael Y. (1976), Japan's Multinational Enterprises, Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.

- Zeira, Y. (1975), 'Overlooked personnel problems of multinational corporations', Columbia Journal of World Business, 10(2), 96–103.
- Zeira, Y. (1976a), 'Management development in ethnocentric multinational corporations', California Management Review, 18(4), 34–42.
- Zeira, Y. (1976b), 'Rotation of expatriates in MNCs', Management International Review, 16(3), 37–46.
- Zeira, Y. (1979a), 'Ethnocentrism in host-country organisations', Business Horizons, 22(3), 66–75.
- Zeira, Y. (1979b), 'The role of the training director in multinational corporations', Training and Development Journal, 33(3), 20–25.
- Zeira, Y. and M. Banai (1981), 'Attitudes of host country organizations towards MNCs' staffing policies: A cross-country and cross-industry analysis', Management International Review, 21(2), 38–47.
- Zeira, Y. and M. Banai (1984), 'Present and desired methods of selecting expatriate managers for international assignments', Personnel Review, 13(3), 29–35.
- Zeira, Y. and M. Banai (1985), 'Selection of expatriate managers in MNCs: The host-environment point of view', International Studies of Management and Organization, 15(1), 33–51.
- Zeira, Y. and E. Harari (1977), 'Third-country managers in multinational corporations', Personnel Review, 6(1), 32–37.
- Zeira, Y. and E. Harari (1979a), 'Host-country organizations and expatriate managers in Europe', California Management Review, 21(3), 40–50.
- Zeira, Y. and E. Harari (1979b), 'Overcoming the resistance of MNCs to attitude surveys of host-country organization', Management International Review, 19(3), 49–58.
- Zeira, Y., E. Harari and D. Izraeli-Nundi (1975), 'Some structural and cultural factors in ethnocentric multinational corporations and employee morale', Journal of Management Studies, 12(1), 66–82.
- Zeira, Y., O. Yeheskel and W. Newburry (2004), 'A comparative analysis of performance assessment: International joint venture managers versus regional headquarters managers', The International Journal of Human Resource Management, 15(4–5), 670–687.