Bo Bengtsson is Professor of Political Science at the Institute for Housing and Urban Research, Uppsala University (Sweden) and the Department of Urban Studies, Malmö University (Sweden). Starting with his PhD thesis Housing: Market Commodity of the Welfare State (1995), he has published a large number of books and articles on Swedish and comparative housing policy and politics, on integration policy and politics, on the role of civil society organizations in housing and integration and on case study methodology. He is a member of the editorial board of Housing, Theory and Society and an honorary professor at Heriot-Watt University in Edinburgh (Scotland, UK).

Sandra Buchholz is Professor of Sociology at the Otto Friedrich University Bamberg (Germany). Before, she served as a research scientist in various international comparative research projects. Her research focuses especially on how national institutions and cultures influence the structure and development of social inequalities and individual life courses. She has published several articles and books on this topic.

Caroline Dewilde is Associate Professor at the Department of Sociology, Tilburg University (the Netherlands). Her main research interests concern the dynamics of inequality and poverty at different levels of analysis, from the individual life course to the welfare state, from a cross-national perspective. She has published in a range of (inter)national journals and books across the social sciences. In 2011, Caroline received a European Research Council (ERC) Starting Grant for the HOWCOME project (www.tilburguniversity.edu/howcome). The project analyses changes in economic and social inequalities and housing regimes and the interplay between these, in particular the increase in owner-occupation, during the postwar period.

John Doling is Emeritus Professor at the University of Birmingham (UK). He has researched and published widely in a number of related fields, principally housing markets and housing policy, in addition to population change and welfare systems. His main focus of attention has been on Britain and other advanced industrialized countries in Europe, North America and the Asia Pacific Region. He has undertaken research and consultancy funded by a variety of organizations including the United Nations (UN), the European Union (EU), the UK Government, research councils and foundations.

Theodore P. Gerber is Professor of Sociology and Director of the Center for Russia, East Europe, and Central Asia, University of Wisconsin–Madison (US). He conducts research on social stratification, demography, public opinion and related topics in Russia and other former Soviet countries.

Kathrin Kolb is Research Scientist at the Otto Friedrich University Bamberg (Germany), where she is engaged in various international comparative research projects. Her main research interests lie in the areas of life courses, education, housing, social inequality and wealth inequality.

Stephan Köppe is Lecturer in Social Policy at the School of Social Policy, Social Work and Social Justice, University College Dublin (Ireland). His research focuses on the public–private nexus of welfare finance and provision. He has published on welfare markets in the areas of private pensions, school choice and welfare users, as well as on housing wealth and intergenerational transfers.

Christian Lennartz is a postdoctoral fellow at the Amsterdam Institute for Social Science Research (AISSR), University of Amsterdam (the Netherlands). His main research interests and areas of publication are housing systems and welfare states, the political economy of housing, housing and family relations, housing careers of younger adults, and comparative social research.

Srna Mandič is Associate Professor at the Faculty of Social Sciences and Head of the Centre for Welfare Studies, University of Ljubljana (Slovenia). She has served as a member of the Group of Experts on access to housing at the Council of Europe, as member of the Coordination Committee of the European Network for Housing Research (ENHR) and as Chair of the Council for the Protection of Tenants' Rights of the City Council of the City of Ljubljana. Her research interests include housing, quality of life, demography and welfare. Recent publications are 'Decisions to renovate: identifying key determinants in Central and Eastern European post-socialist countries' (2013, Urban Studies) and 'Housing conditions and their structural determinants: comparisons within the enlarged EU' (2012, Urban Studies).

Maja Mrzel is a researcher at the Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Ljubljana (Slovenia). Her field of research primarily focuses on social networks and social support. Since 2009 she has been a member of different national projects and research groups covering quality of life, intergenerational solidarity, care for the elderly, sexuality and intimate lifestyles of the young. Her main focus remains on social science methodology.

Michelle Norris is Head of the School of Social Policy, Social Work and Social Justice, University College Dublin (Ireland). She has researched and published widely on social housing management and finance, as well as urban regeneration in Ireland and Europe. Her latest book, Social Housing, Disadvantage and Neighbourhood Liveability, was published by Routledge in 2014. She is co-conveyor of the European Network for Housing Research working group on comparative housing policy. She advises the Irish Government on housing policy issues and is a member of the National Economic and Social Council, which advises the Irish Government on social and economic policy. She also chairs the Housing Finance Agency, which finances housing for low-income households in Ireland.

Richard Ronald is a professor at the Centre for Urban Studies, University of Amsterdam (the Netherlands) and in the School of Social Policy at the University of Birmingham (UK). His research focuses on housing in relation to social, economic and urban transformations in Europe and Pacific Asia. He has held Japan Foundation as well as Japan Society for the Promotion of Science Fellowships at Kobe University (Japan) and has been a Visiting Professor at Kyung Hee University (Seoul, South Korea) as well as at the Asia Research Institute, National University of Singapore. He is currently Editor-in-Chief of the International Journal of Housing Policy. In 2011, Richard received an ERC grant in support of the HOUWEL project (www.houwel.uva.nl), investigating the role of family-held housing property wealth in shaping welfare relations and regimes.

Hannu Ruonavaara is Professor of Sociology and Head of the Department of Social Research, University of Turku (Finland). In recent years his research has focused on the retrenchment of Finnish housing policies, methodology of comparative–historical social and political research, neighbour relations and actor-centred social theory. He has published English-language articles on housing tenure, owner-occupation, home ideology, self-building, process tracing, housing equity and other topics in major housing studies journals as well as in edited books. He is the present editor of Housing, Theory and Society.

Beverley A. Searle is Senior Lecturer and Head of Geography at the University of Dundee (Scotland, UK). Her research interests combine long-term trends in subjective wellbeing and social welfare with concerns around housing inequalities and intergenerational transfers. A particular focus has been on the changing role of housing wealth as a substitute for publicly provided welfare.

Adriana Mihaela Soaita is a Romanian chartered architect and planner with a prolific portfolio of residential and commercial projects undertaken over two decades. Her postgraduate academic inquiry has been inspired by the encounters with the people for whom she designed; their narratives aroused her fascination with the multiplicity of meanings attached to housing. This led her to undertaking a PhD in Housing Studies at King's College, London (UK) (awarded in 2011) and a period of postdoctoral research at the University of St Andrews (Scotland, UK) and Tilburg University (the Netherlands). As an interdisciplinary social scientist, Adriana is interested in research receptive to cultural patterns and social stratification in the fields of human geography, housing and urban studies, the built environment and post-communist change.

Jardar Sørvoll is a Senior Housing Researcher at NOVA, Oslo and Akershus University College of the Applied Sciences (Norway). His main research interests include housing policy in the Nordic countries, housing in the ageing society and comparative history. Sørvoll's PhD dissertation is an analysis of the politics of cooperative housing in Norway and Sweden between 1945 and 2013. His research has also appeared in the journals Housing, Theory and Society and The International Journal of Housing Policy.

Alison Wallace has been a research fellow with the Centre for Housing Policy, University of York (UK) since 2001 and a Churchill Fellow since 2016. She has undertaken a range of projects for various UK government, third-sector and private funders, including the Department of Communities and Local Government, the Joseph Rowntree Foundation, Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister Northern Ireland and Lloyds Banking Group. These projects concern new housing supply, poverty and home ownership, sustainability of residential and buy-to-let markets, the limits and potential of shared ownership and self-build housing. Previously a social housing practitioner for many years, she completed her doctoral research into the cultural economy of local housing markets in 2007.

Jane R. Zavisca is Associate Professor of Sociology and Associate Dean for Research in the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences, University of Arizona (US). Her areas of expertise include housing stratification, policy and politics in the former Soviet region, as well as the cultural meaning of mortgages in the United States.
