

Tables

6.1	Motifs of prevention, disruption and detection	158
6.2	A typology of disruption methods	163
6.3	Seizures of drugs and guns during activities undertaken within Operation Secret, August 2002–June 2003	168
6.4	Offers of counterfeit goods	170
6.5	Sample infractions focused on in efforts to disrupt one small organized crime group over 18 months	175
6.6	Examples of methods used to disrupt a local organized crime group	176
8A.1	Permissible actions by police officers during stops under People v. DeBour	231
9.1	Perceptions of acceptance by non-Muslim society (New York City and London samples)	238
9.2	Relationships within prior-attitude subgroups: police behavior and perceived procedural justice as correlated to Muslim–American willingness to cooperate (New York City sample)	245
9.3A	Impact of policy fairness on willingness to alert authorities to threats (NYC Muslims)	246
9.3B	Impact of policy fairness on willingness to alert authorities to threats (London Muslims)	247
9.4A	Impact of fair citizen contact on willingness to work with authorities (NYC Muslims)	248
9.4B	Impact of fair citizen contact on willingness to work with authorities (London Muslims)	248
13.1	Selected instruments for the transnational exchange of police information and their legal framework	335