Contributors

Allerkamp, Doreen is a Project Director at the Mannheim Centre for European Social Research (MZES), University of Mannheim, Germany. She specialises in European Union institutional politics and informal governance, with a particular focus on the European Council and the Council of Ministers and their inner workings. Her current research deals with the Council Presidency and its impact on Member State behaviour in the context of EU decision-making.

Andrecka, Marta is an Assistant Professor at the Copenhagen University. Before taking up this position she conducted both her post-doctoral fellowship as well as her PhD in Aarhus University in Denmark. Marta undertakes teaching and research in public procurement law, public-private partnerships and EU Law. Throughout her projects, she has gained in-depth knowledge of legal aspects of public procurement in regards to framework agreements, sustainable procurement, complex contracts as well as procurement centralization. Marta is a member of the Centre for Enterprise Liability, a co-founder of Academic Support for PPP in Poland, and she actively collaborates with research centres and practitioners all around Europe.

Aspey, Eleanor is a Lecturer in law at the University of Manchester School of Law. Her research interests are in public procurement law from an EU and international perspective, with a particular focus on utilities procurement and the use of procurement to promote social and environmental policy.

Bruyninckx, Tim works as an attorney-at-law at the Brussels bar and is affiliated as a doctoral researcher to the European University Institute (Firenze, Italy). His research and professional interests are public economic law (public procurement law, EU state aid law, privatisations, etc.), competition regulation and economic analysis of law.

Cerqueira Gomes, Pedro is a lawyer at Cerqueira Gomes and Associados and a Member of the Portuguese Bar Association. He is an invited Lecturer at Catholic University of Portugal – Law School of Porto and also at the Institute of Accounting and Administration of Porto. He has an LL.M in Public Procurement and Policy from the University of Nottingham and is a Master in Administrative Law of the Catholic University of Portugal – Porto. Currently he is enrolled as a PhD Student – Joint Doctoral Research Thesis in Public Procurement and public innovation at the Catholic University of Portugal – Porto and the University of Turin, Italy. His research and publications are in public procurement, EU law and economic law.

Craven, Richard is a Lecturer in law at the University of Leicester. Richard’s research focuses on the regulation of public procurement in the UK and EU. Richard is a socio-legal/empirical researcher and, to date, his research has studied PFI/PPP procurement, the procurement remedies system and the pursuit of social objectives through public procurement. In 2015, the British Academy provided small grant funding for Richard’s current research into the protection of workers on public contracts and the chapter in this collection forms part of that research.

Dawar, Kamala is a Lecturer in international commercial law in the Sussex University School of Law. She conducts research, policy analysis and training in WTO and EU trade law, public procurement, competition, and consumer issues. She has worked for academic, inter-governmental and non-governmental organisations, including the WTO, World Bank, the European Commission and development agencies, such as GIZ, UNCTAD and the OSCE, regularly undertaking capacity building and technical assistance on trade law and policy issues in developing countries. She has also published articles on international trade and development issues such as WTO and EU law and governance, public procurement, competition and consumer policy, preferential trading arrangements, and development law and policy issues.

Fanøe Petersen, Cecilie is a PhD researcher at Copenhagen Business School where she is working on her thesis on the interaction between public procurement law and State aid law. She has previously also co-authored an article on public procurement law and State aid. Cecilie has previously worked as procurement lawyer.

Ferk, Petra is Assistant Professor of Public Administration at the Graduate School of Government and European Studies, as well as Co-Founder and Researcher at the Institute for Public-Private Partnership, both in Slovenia. She is a specialist in public procurement and public services with a focus on services of general economic interest, public-private partnerships, concessions, and State aid law in relation to public services and public infrastructure. She is co-author of the leading Slovenian legal monograph dealing with public services, public-private partnerships, and State aid.

Herrera Anchustegui, Ignacio is a PhD candidate and Course Leader of the EU/EEA Public Procurement Course at the Faculty of Law of the University of Bergen. He specializes in EU and EEA Competition and Public Procurement Law, with a main focus on buyer power as a source of competitive concerns. He is the author of several publications.

de Mars, Sylvia is a Lecturer in law at Newcastle University. Her research interests lie in the field of substantive EU law; her ongoing work, funded by the British Academy and Leverhulme Trust, examines the interplay of EU free movement rules with the domestic organization of public healthcare systems. Other work she has recently engaged in has focused on EU data protection and EU public procurement rules, with a particular interest in how EU developments in these fields interact with social and economic policies in different EU Member States. She is the author of several publications.

Ølykke, Grith Skovgaard is an Associate Professor at Copenhagen Business School. Her work relates to the interaction between EU public procurement law, State aid law and competition law, and she has several international publications on this topic. Recently, Grith has co-authored textbooks in Danish on EU competition law (2014) and EU public procurement law (2015). She has been involved as an expert in the work preceding the implementation of the 2014 Directive in Denmark and in Sweden. Some of Grith’s research is interdisciplinary and conducted in cooperation with economists; the most recent and current interdisciplinary research she is involved in is on abnormally low tenders – which was also the topic of her PhD thesis – and is funded by the Swedish Competition Authority.

Risvig Hamer, Carina is an Associate Professor at the Law department at the University of Southern Denmark, where she is teaching primarily public procurement law, EU law, administrative law and competition law. Prior to her employment at the University of Southern Denmark, she was working at the Danish Competition and Consumer Authority (2006–13), where her tasks included drafting public procurement legislation (including the Danish implementation of the Remedies Directive), giving guidance on public procurement law, handling informal complaints of breaches of the procurement rules and taking part in the negotiations of the new Public Procurement Directives. Carina’s PhD in procurement law from Copenhagen Business School was entitled ‘Public contracts, not covered, or not fully covered, by the Public Sector Directive’ and was Sanchez-Graells, Albert is Senior Lecturer in law at the University of Bristol Law School and a Member of the European Commission Stakeholder Expert Group on Public Procurement (2015–18). He is a specialist in European economic law, with a main focus on competition law and public procurement, on which he has published the leading monograph Public Procurement and the EU Competition Rules (2nd edn, 2015). He is also interested in general issues of sector regulation and corporate governance and, more broadly, in the rules supporting the development and expansion of the European Union’s internal market. He takes a law and economics approach to his research and is particularly keen on the analysis of the systems of incentives and enforcement mechanisms that law creates or facilitates.

Skalova, Monika is a PhD candidate at the Department of Business Law at the Charles University in Prague. Her research focuses on public procurement, mainly the negotiated procedure without publication and qualification requirements. Her dissertation ‘Qualification in Public Procurement: A Good Servant but a Bad Master’ was jointly awarded the Sussex Law School Prize for the Highest LLM Dissertation Mark. Monika has spent several years working for leading Czech law firms in the field of public procurement.

Wolswinkel, Johan is Associate Professor of Administrative Law at Tilburg University and Senior Member of the Tilburg Law and Economics Centre (TILEC). His research concerns legal and economic issues of market design, both from a national and a European (internal market) perspective. He has published several contributions on the triangular relationship between the EU fundamental freedoms, public procurement and (limited) authorisation schemes and has co-edited the book Scarcity and the State. The Allocation of Limited Rights by the Administration (2016).