We warmly thank the contributors for their work in bringing this collection together. This book is peer-reviewed and we have been fortunate to receive input from many individuals (in differing ways) across a number of countries: Eric Barendt, Alysia Blackham, Derek Brambauer, Jane Brambauer, Andrew Dickinson, Francois du Bois, Catherine Easton, Lilian Edwards, Tracey Elliott, Sir Edward Garnier QC MP, Trevor Hartley, Uta Kohl, James Lee, Avner Levin, Arno Lodder, Alastair Mullis, Andrew Murray, Maria Murphy, Jan Oster, Abenaa Owusu-Bempah, Gavin Phillipson, Ian Walden, Paul Wragg and Katja Ziegler. As well, we thank Ben Booth at Edward Elgar Publishing. In particular we single out the contribution of two individuals whose assistance has been integral. First, Daithí Mac Síthigh has been a tremendous colleague as this project unfolded. Second, Anna Evangelidi has been a stalwart (while completing her doctorate). The range of her work on this project has been vast and integral to this book at its culmination. We also thank The City Law School for providing us with the financial support that has allowed Anna to participate in this project.

We are grateful to The Modern Law Review as well as the Leicester and Nottingham offices of Freeth Cartwright LLP Solicitors for supporting this project. We also thank those who were involved in various ways throughout the process including John Hartshorne, Sally Kyd, Teresa Rowe, Gemma Turton, Paolo Vargiu and Liz Wicks.
