Contributors

Paco Abril is a Sociologist. He teaches at the Faculty of Education and Psychology at the University of Girona. His research interests include gender, masculinity, work–life balance, paternity and co-education.

Jenny Alsarve is a Senior Lecturer in Sociology at Örebro University, Sweden. Her research focuses on work–family balance, the transition to parenthood, family life after divorce and lone motherhood.

Patricia Amigot is Assistant Professor in the Department of Social Work at the Public University of Navarra (UPNA) in Pamplona. Her research focuses on the study of subjectivity and power, gender inequalities and gender violence.

Sonia Bertolini is Associate Professor at the University of Turin, where she teaches Sociology of Work. Her research interests include labour market flexibilization, youth labour market entry, female labour market participation, labour market flexibilization and transition to adult life and the sociology of professions.

Carmen Botía-Morillas is Associate Professor in the Department of Sociology at the Universidad Pablo de Olavide in Seville, Spain. Her fields of interest focus on gender relations, new fatherhood and motherhood, the sociology of work, negotiation and qualitative methods.

Katarina Boye is a Research Fellow in Sociology at the Swedish Institute for Social Research. She studies the intersection between the family and the labour market and focuses particularly on the consequences of the division of work between men and women.

Felix Bühlmann is Assistant Professor of Life Course Sociology at the University of Lausanne, Switzerland. His current research interests include the life course, economic sociology and political sociology. He is a member of the NCCR LIVES ‘Overcoming vulnerabilities: Life Course Perspectives’.

Anna Dechant is a Researcher at the Institute for Family Research at the University of Bamberg (ifb). Her main research interest is the division of paid and unpaid work within couples. She also examines how separation and divorce affect family life.

Marta Domínguez-Folgueras is an Associate Professor at Sciences Po (OSC) in Paris and a Doctoral member of the Juan March Institute in Madrid. Her research focuses on the sociology of family and gender relations.

Marie Evertsson is an Associate Professor of Sociology at Stockholm University, Sweden. She is affiliated with the Stockholm University Linnaeus Center on Social Policy and Family Dynamics in Europe (SPaDE). Her research focuses on gender (in)equalities in the home and in the labour market from an internationally comparative perspective.

Nadia Girardin is a PhD candidate at the University of Lausanne. Her main research interest is on the transition to parenthood in Switzerland, which she explores through a life-course perspective.

María José González is an Associate Professor in the Department of Political and Social Sciences at Pompeu Fabra University (UPF) in Barcelona. Her research focuses on the study of family sociology, gender inequality, child welfare, family policy, social inequality and comparative sociology.

Daniela Grunow is a Professor of Sociology at the Goethe University Frankfurt, Germany. Her research focuses on the interaction of market work and gender relations in different welfare regimes. She is the principal investigator of the ERC-project APPARENT, which studies norms and gender divisions of work at the transition to parenthood.

Doris Hanappi is a Researcher in Sociology and Demography at UC Berkeley and is affiliated with the Swiss National Centre of Competence in Research LIVES – Overcoming Vulnerability: Life Course Perspectives (University of Lausanne). Her main research areas are the social, economic, and demographic aspects of work and family, employment, family planning, and well-being.

Teresa Jurado-Guerrero is a Professor at the National University of Distance Education (UNED) in Madrid, Spain. Her research focuses on comparative social policies, youth, family and gender, in particular undoing gender in housework, in parenting and at the workplace.

Irene Lapuerta is Assistant Professor in the Department of Social Work at the Public University of Navarra (UPNA) in Pamplona. Her research focuses on the study of family policies, the labour market and gender inequalities.

Contributors

Jean-Marie Le Goff is Senior Researcher at the Centre of Life Course and Inequalities Studies (Lines) at the University of Lausanne and affiliated with the Swiss National Centre of Competencies in Research Overcoming Vulnerability: Life Course Perspective (NCCR Lives). His topics of interest are on life-course transitions, especially union formation, the transition to parenthood and the transition to retirement.

Teresa Martín-García is a Tenured Scientist within the research group on Demographic Dynamics at the Center for Human and Social Sciences of the Spanish Council for Scientific Research (CSIC), Madrid. Her research focuses on fertility, the (new) family formation process, the intertwining of education, work and family trajectories for both women and men and the new role of men in family dynamics.

Jordi Monferrer is a Professor of Sociology at the Madrid Open University (UDIMA) (Spain). His research focuses on social movements and gender studies. He is the coordinator of the Social Cognition and Social-Political and Cultural Processes Research Group.

Rosy Musumeci is a Research Fellow in Sociology at the University of Turin, Italy. Her main research interests are: female labour market participation, the transition to parenthood, work–family balance, job insecurity, social exclusion of youth, and comparative qualitative analysis.

Manuela Naldini is a Sociologist and Associate Professor of Sociology of the Family at the University of Turin, Italy. Her main areas of interest are: family changes and social policy, comparative welfare state, gender studies, work–family reconciliation issues, childcare, the transition to parenthood, motherhood and parenthood.

Olga Nešporová is a Researcher at the Institute of Sociology, Academy of Sciences of the Czech Republic, and the Research Institute for Labour and Social Affairs in Prague. Her research interest focuses on parenthood, combining care and paid work, and family policy. She follows Czech parents in her longitudinal research.

Maria Reimann is an Anthropologist working at the Department of Ethnography and Cultural Anthropology of the University of Warsaw. She is writing her PhD on the transition to parenthood in Europe at the University of Amsterdam under the supervision of Daniela Grunow and Giselinde Kuipers. Her main academic interests are family, parenthood, and childhood.
Annika Rinklake is a Researcher at the Institute for Family Research at the University of Bamberg (ifb). Her research interests include couples’ division of paid and unpaid work as well as late employment careers and the transition to retirement.

Christine Roman is a Professor of Sociology at Örebro University, Sweden. Her area of research interest is continuity and change in gender relations in modern society, with a particular focus on the reconciliation of paid work and family commitments and the family division of work.

Marta Seiz holds a PhD in Political and Social Science from Universitat Pompeu Fabra. She currently works as a Postdoctoral Researcher at the Spanish National Research Council (CSIC). Her research focuses on family-related socio-demographic issues, such as couple specialization dynamics, union formation patterns, and the interrelation of family, employment and income trajectories.

Růžena Horňáková Stuchlá obtained a Bachelor degree in Sociology at the West Bohemia University in Pilsen. Her Master’s degree in sociology was received from the Charles University in Prague. She is interested in the sociology of the family.

Paola Maria Torrioni is Assistant Professor in Sociology of Cultural Processes. Her research interests are focused on family, youth transitions from the parental household, the transition to parenthood, socialization processes and mixed-methods research programmes. She has technical skills in quantitative analysis and in longitudinal qualitative analysis.

Isabel Valarino received her PhD in Social Sciences from the University of Lausanne. Her current research is funded by the Swiss National Science Foundation. It compares leave policy preferences. Her research interests include gender and the welfare state, family policies, parenthood and the gender division of work.

Gerlieke Veltkamp is a PhD candidate in Sociology at the Goethe University Frankfurt, Germany. Her research focuses on pre- and postnatal healthcare professionals’ interactions with parents and children in different welfare states. At the University of Amsterdam, the Netherlands, she explores family practices within a care context in children’s first years.

Mirjam Verweij is a former student of Daniela Grunow. She graduated in 2012 at the University of Amsterdam, on the division of paid work and parental care among first time parents in the Netherlands. After her graduation she started working on the Dutch chapter of the APPARENT project.