Acknowledgments

Several people were extremely helpful in making the publication of this Handbook possible. First, to the contributors, I boldly admit that I reached out to whom I consider to be the leading thought-leaders in the field of illicit trade and you responded to my invitation with a shared passion to create a book that would truly encompass our respective knowledge in the field. I was amazed and humbled by the spirit of the contributors to give the extra time required for this project – a simple thank you does not really capture my gratitude. It was a privilege and honor to work together with all of you on this novel book – we have provided a template for future researchers in this Handbook. But, in addition to the contributors, there are others who have assisted with the preparation of this Handbook – some of whom can be named; others who wish to remain anonymous. First, I want to give my deepest gratitude to those who work in the field of illicit trade who have provided feedback on this Handbook, but prefer to remain anonymous. I acknowledge these nameless persons as the “dream team” – it is through your in-depth knowledge of illicit trade and ultimate guidance that I have found the relevance and desire to continue research in illicit trade and the fortitude to act as Editor for the Handbook. I am deeply grateful to Jeffrey Snyder of Crowell & Moring for writing the foreword to the book. I would also like to recognize all of the assistance given to me by Lisa Faye Miller, Managing Editor, Business Horizons. I have worked with outstanding graduate fellows in our MBA program at the Villanova School of Business for the past 25 years. I would like to acknowledge recent fellows, Fanny D’Onofrio, Jesse Ponzio, and Joseph Marotta – thank you for assisting me with the research for this book. I want to recognize my sister, Kathryn Pertzsch, who designed the cover for the Handbook – a very creative commercial design professional who felt that “Trojan Horses” appropriately characterized the innuendo of illicit trade. This book would not be a reality without the tireless work of Harry Fabian, Assistant Editor, at Edward Elgar – your professionalism has been exemplary. Finally, I have to acknowledge the role of a supportive family, my husband, Sohail, and children, Matt and Aeysha – thank you for understanding the time involved with working on a project of this magnitude.

Publisher’s note: Every effort has been made to trace all the copyright holders but if any have been inadvertently overlooked the publishers will be pleased to make the necessary arrangement at the first opportunity.
