Contributors

Maartje van der Aa is PhD Candidate at the Health Services Research Department of Maastricht University (the Netherlands). She holds a Joint Master’s degree combining social sciences (Deusto University, Spain), public health (Vilnius University, Lithuania) and business (Corvinus University, Hungary). Her main interests are the development and sustainability of health systems and the role of citizens, professionals, policymakers and politics within this process.

Ben Baumberg Geiger is Senior Lecturer at the School of Social Policy, Sociology and Social Research (SSPSSR) at the University of Kent (UK), where he also co-directs the University of Kent Q-Step Centre. His main research interests include stigma-related issues, the intersections of work, benefits and disability, the judgments of deservingness of disabled benefit claimants, and the idea (and limits) of ‘truth’.

Helena Blomberg is Professor of Social Policy and Social Work and Chair of the Department of Social Work and Social Policy at the Swedish School of Social Science, University of Helsinki (Finland). Her research interests include issues of health and well-being, welfare attitudes in comparative perspective, policy changes and agenda setting power in the welfare state.

Angela Bos is Associate Professor of Political Science at the College of Wooster (USA). Her research interests are in gender in politics, political psychology, campaigns and elections, media and politics, civic education, political participation, and effective pedagogy in political science.

Christopher Buß is Researcher at the Collaborative Research Center SFB 884 and doctoral student at the Graduate School of Economic and Social Sciences in Mannheim (Germany). His research interests comprise attitude research and reforms of the labour market.

Bas van Doorn is Associate Professor of Political Science at the College of Wooster (USA). His research focuses on the ways in which citizens, media, and politicians influence one another. He has published, among other topics, on media portrayals of poverty in the United States and on the role of social networks in agenda setting.
Contributors

Bernhard Ebbinghaus is Professor of Social Policy at the Department of Social Policy and Intervention and Senior Research Fellow at Green Templeton College, University of Oxford. Previously he was Professor of Sociology at University of Mannheim, directing the Project ‘Welfare State Reform Support from Below’ in the Political Economy of Reforms Research Centre. His research interests are comparative welfare state and social policy analysis.

Silvia Evers is Professor in Health Economics and Health Technology Assessment at the Health Services Research Department of Maastricht University (the Netherlands). She has expertise on the methodology of economic evaluation in healthcare and the role of economic evaluation in insurance policy decisions.

Audun Fladmoe is Senior Research Fellow at the Institute for Social Research (ISF) and Centre for Research on Civil Society & Voluntary Sector, Oslo (Norway). His main research interests include different areas in public opinion and political behaviour, such as welfare attitudes, social capital, voluntarism and participation.

Mickaël Hiligsmann is Assistant Professor in Health Economics and Health Technology Assessment at the Health Services Research Department of Maastricht University (the Netherlands). He is an expert in decision-analytic modelling and valuation of healthcare in methods such as discrete choice experiments.

Marjolein Jeene is Lecturer of Human Resource Management at Fontys University of Applied Sciences, school of HRM and Psychology (the Netherlands). She published several articles regarding deservingness of welfare recipients.

Johanna Kallio is Senior Research Fellow at the Department of Social Research at the University of Turku (Finland). Her research focuses on various aspects of welfare attitudes and perceptions, social problems and intergenerational transmission of socioeconomic disadvantage. She is especially interested in welfare attitudes among street-level bureaucrats of social security, elites and general public.
Olli Kangas is Research Director at the Social Insurance Institution of Finland. Previously he has occupied professorships in Turku (Finland), Uppsala (Sweden), Copenhagen and Odense (Denmark). His research interests revolve around comparative political economy of the welfare state: institutions, causes and consequences.

Anouk Kootstra is Doctoral Researcher at the Politics Department of the University of Manchester (UK). She is interested in the impact of migration and ethnic diversity on public welfare attitudes. In her research she uses survey experiments to study how welfare claimants’ ethnic background, race and migration status affect their perceived deservingness.

Christian Kroll is Senior Lecturer in Social Work and Social Policy at the Swedish School of Social Work, University of Helsinki (Finland), and Reader in Social Work at Lund University (Sweden). His main research interests include issues of legitimization and legitimacy of welfare state reforms and attitude formation among citizens, groups of welfare state clients and welfare state professionals in a comparative perspective.

Staffan Kumlin is Professor of Political Science at the University of Gothenburg (Sweden) and Research Professor at the Institute for Social Research, Oslo (Norway). He co-edited How Welfare States Shape the Democratic Public (Edward Elgar, 2014). He is member of the Questionnaire Design Team that developed the Welfare Attitudes module in the European Social Survey 2016 (ESS 2016).

Tijs Laenen is Doctoral Researcher at the Centre for Sociological Research at the University of Leuven (Belgium). His main research interest regards the social legitimacy of welfare distribution between and within different target groups of social policy, with a specific focus on popular welfare deservingness perceptions.

Dorota Lepianka is Postdoctoral Researcher at the Interdisciplinary Social Sciences at Utrecht University (the Netherlands). Her research expertise lies in the field of inequality, poverty and social exclusion as well as their social construction. Her current research interests revolve around the issues of collective boundary drawing (insiders versus outsiders) as well as inter- and intra-group solidarity.

Tom van der Meer is Associate Professor in Political Science at the Department of Political Science at the University of Amsterdam (the Netherlands) and co-director of the Dutch Parliamentary Election Survey. His main research interests regard the causes and consequences of political trust, electoral volatility, and ethnic diversity and social cohesion.

Bart Meuleman is Associate Professor of Sociology at the Centre for Sociological Research (CeSO) at the University of Leuven (Belgium). His research focuses on cross-national comparisons of value and attitude patterns, such as ethnic prejudice, egalitarianism and support for the welfare state. He is a member of the Questionnaire Design Team that developed the Welfare Attitudes module in ESS 2016.

Elias Naumann is Postdoctoral Researcher at the Collaborative Research Center SFB 884 ‘Political Economy of Reforms’ at the University of Mannheim (Germany). His research interests include comparative welfare state research, welfare state attitudes, experimental methods in the social sciences and behavioural economics.

Mikko Niemelä is Professor of Sociology at the Department of Social Research, University of Turku (Finland) and Research Professor at the Social Insurance Institution of Finland. His current research focuses on the cross-national differences in public welfare attitudes, poverty and economic inequality. Other areas of research include mechanisms of the institutional change of welfare states and the role of ideas in policy processes.

Wim van Oorschot is Professor of Social Policy at the Centre for Sociological Research (CeSO) at the University of Leuven (Belgium). His main research interests regard the EU-comparative analysis of the social legitimacy of welfare policies and their reforms. He is co-designer of the Welfare Attitudes modules in ESS 2008 and 2016.

Aggie Paulus is Associate Professor in Health Economics at the Health Services Research Department of Maastricht University (the Netherlands). Her research projects involve valuing inter-sectoral costs and benefits of healthcare, health reform and health system comparison. She has a multidisciplinary research focus.

Jordan Ragusa is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the Department of Political Science at the College of Charleston (USA). His expertise is in American national institutions, presidential and congressional elections, United States political economy, and research methodology.

Tim Reeskens is Assistant Professor of Sociology at the Department of Sociology at Tilburg University (the Netherlands). His main research interests regard the social consequences of immigration and diversity, with a particular focus on social trust, national identity, and welfare state legitimacy. He is a member of the Questionnaire Design Team that developed the Welfare Attitudes module in ESS 2016.

Femke Roosma is Assistant Professor of Sociology at the Department of Sociology at Tilburg University (the Netherlands). Her main research interests regard the social legitimacy of welfare states and the cross-national analysis of multiple dimensions of welfare attitudes.

Meredith Sadin is a Robert Wood Johnson Foundation Scholar in Health Policy at University of California, Berkeley (USA). Her work focuses on the ways in which attitudes towards the rich in America are consequential for policy preferences and voting behaviour. She is the recent recipient of the 2015 APSA Experimental Research Award for Best Dissertation as well as a Russell Sage Foundation Grant.

Kari Steen-Johnsen is Research Director at the Institute for Social Research, Oslo and Research Professor at the Centre for Research on Civil Society and the Voluntary Sector (Norway). Her research centers on changes in civil society and in the public sphere, political and civic participation and social capital.

Wilfred Uunk is Assistant Professor of Sociology at Tilburg University (the Netherlands). His research fields are ethnic minority integration, sociology of the family (homogamy, divorce, female labour force participation) and welfare opinions.

Robert de Vries is Lecturer of quantitative Sociology at the University of Kent (UK). His work mainly focuses on inequality and social hierarchies. He is also interested in improving the quality of social science evidence, and in how politicians and journalists make use of this evidence.

Marjolijn De Wilde is PhD student at the Herman Deleeck Centre for Social Policy at the University of Antwerp (Belgium). She studies the conditionality of social assistance in Europe and the discretion used by case managers and municipality in providing social assistance. She uses an experimental method (factorial survey approach).

Dag Wollebæk is Research Professor at the Institute for Social Research (Oslo, Norway). His research interests regard social capital, trust, voluntary associations, volunteering, and social media.