

Contributors

Dragos Adascalitei holds a PhD from the University of Mannheim, Germany and is a researcher at the Central European University Center for Policy Studies in Budapest, Hungary. His research interests include pension reforms in Central and Eastern Europe, industrial relations and labour markets.

Agnes Batory is a professor of public policy at Central European University, Hungary. Her research interests include: party politics and populism; corruption; and regulation and various aspects of compliance and policy implementation in the EU context. Her recent publications have appeared in Public Administration, Democratization, Governance and the Journal of European Public Policy.

Andrew Cartwright is a research fellow and co-director of the Center for Policy Studies at Central European University, Hungary. His research interests include development policy in Central and Eastern Europe, particularly focusing on transitions in the rural areas. He is currently chairman of PASOS, an association of think tanks and policy centres from Central, Eastern and Southern Europe.

Daniela Craciun is a Yehuda Elkana Fellow at Central European University, Hungary, where she is pursuing a PhD. Her teaching and research interests lie in the areas of methodology and higher education public policy, specifically internationalization and international student mobility. Currently, she is a visiting scholar at the Center for International Higher Education at Boston College, USA.

Stefan Domonkos is a researcher at the Institute of Economic Research of the Slovak Academy of Sciences and advisor to the State Secretary of the Ministry of Finance of the Slovak Republic. His research concerns the political economy of pension reforms in Central and Eastern Europe as well as public preferences towards redistribution. His work has been published in Global Social Policy, the International Journal of Social Welfare, Governance and East European Politics and Societies, among others. He earned his PhD at Mannheim University, Germany.

Heather Grabbe is director of the Open Society European Policy Institute, Belgium. From 2004 to 2009 she was senior advisor to European Commissioner for Enlargement Olli Rehn, responsible in his Cabinet for the Balkans and Turkey. Before joining the Commission, she was deputy director of the Centre for European Reform. Her academic work includes research at the European University Institute, Italy, Chatham House, UK, and Oxford and Birmingham universities, UK (from which she earned her BA and PhD respectively), and teaching at the London School of Economics, UK. Her publications include The EU's Transformative Power: Europeanization through Conditionality in Central and Eastern Europe (Palgrave, 2006).

Achim Kemmerling is associate professor of political economy at the Department of International Relations and the School of Public Policy, Central European University, Hungary. He has published on issues of tax policy, social and labour market policies, and fiscal federalism. His monograph Taxing the Working Poor (Edward Elgar Publishing, 2009) deals with the political and economic trade-offs between redistribution and job incentives for poor workers. He has worked as a consultant to the German parliament, the German Society for Technical Cooperation and the European Investment Bank.

Andrea Krizsan is research fellow at Central European University, Budapest, Hungary. Her research focuses on equality policy change in countries of Central and Eastern Europe. Her publications include articles in journals such as Violence against Women, European Journal of Women's Studies, Ethnic and Racial Studies, Social Politics, European Integration Online Papers, and Journal for Ethnic and Minority Studies, and chapters in several edited volumes. She edited a volume on ethnic monitoring and data collection (2001) and co-edited one with J. Squires and H. Skjeie on the changing nature of European equality regimes (2012).

Kristin Makszin is a researcher at the Institute for Political Science, Hungarian Academy of Sciences Centre for Social Sciences. She completed a PhD in political science at Central European University, Hungary in 2013 on 'Reforming East Central European welfare states: Governments, technocrats, and the patterns of quiet retrenchment'.

Liviu Matei is the provost and pro-rector of Central European University, Hungary and a professor of higher education policy at the university's School of Public Policy. He directs the Yehuda Elkana Center for Higher Education at the university.

Gergő Medve-Bálint is a research fellow at the Centre for Social Sciences, Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and an assistant professor at the Department of Comparative and Institutional Economics at Corvinus University of Budapest, Hungary. His main research interests include regional development and regional disparities, with a particular focus on the territorial effects of foreign investments and the EU's cohesion policy on the Eastern member states.

B. Guy Peters is Maurice Falk Professor of American Government at the University of Pittsburgh, USA. He has written extensively in the areas of public administration and public policy, both for the United States and comparatively. Among his recent publications are Comparative Governance: Rediscovering the Functional Dimension of Governing (Cambridge University Press, 2016), with Jon Pierre, and Contemporary Approaches to Public Policy (Macmillan, 2016), with Philippe Zittoun.

Diane Stone is Centenary Professor in the Institute of Governance and Policy Analysis at the University of Canberra, Australia. She is also a professor in politics and international studies at Warwick University, UK. From 2004 to 2008, she was European Commission Marie Curie Chair and Foundation Professor of Public Policy at Central European University, Hungary, where she remains a visiting professor. Currently, she is consulting editor of the journal Policy and Politics and a vice president of the International Public Policy Association.

Sara Svensson is a research fellow at the Center for Policy Studies and visiting professor at the School of Public Policy at Central European University, Hungary. She has also taught courses and supervised BA theses at four Swedish universities: Örebro University, Karlstad University, Halmstad University and University West. Her academic research focuses on policy formation and governance structures in European cross-border regions. She holds a PhD in public policy and political science from Central European University.

András Tétényi is an assistant professor of economics at the Institute of World Economics of the Corvinus University of Budapest, Hungary. He is programme managing director for the International Economy and Business (IEB) Master's Programme and academic coordinator for the International Master's in Economy, State and Society (IMESS) double degree with University College London, UK. His research interests are in the field of official development assistance policies of Visegrad countries and asylum policies of Hungary.

Simona Torotcoi is a PhD candidate at Central European University, Hungary's Doctoral School of Political Science, Public Policy and International Relations. Her main research interests include the study of higher education policies, especially access and participation policies. Currently she is conducting research on the implementation of the Bologna Process in a comparative perspective.

Violetta Zentai is a cultural anthropologist with a PhD from Rutgers University, USA. She serves as co-director of the Center for Policy Studies at Central European University, Hungary. She is engaged in research focusing on ethnic and gender inequalities and European equality policies, and debates on post-socialist capitalisms and social exclusion and inclusion. She has served as team leader or lead coordinator of a number of larger comparative European research projects. Her recent publications discuss Roma inclusion and social exclusion in Central and Eastern Europe.