Contributors

Diego Acosta is a Reader in European and Migration Law at the University of Bristol, UK. His area of expertise is EU migration law, but he is now finishing a new book on the legal construction on the national and the foreigner in South America since independence until today. He has published widely in the area of European Migration Law, including his book The Long-Term Residence Status as a Subsidiary Form of EU Citizenship: An Analysis of Directive 2003/109 (Martinus Nijhoff, 2011).

Idil Atak is an Associate Professor in the Department of Criminology of Ryerson University, Toronto, Canada, and Ryerson's Criminology and Social Justice Graduate Program Director. The Editor-in-Chief of the International Journal of Migration and Border Studies, she is also a member of the International Association for the Study of Forced Migration's (IASFM) Executive Committee and past president of the Canadian Association for Refugee and Forced Migration Studies (CARFMS). She served as a legal expert for the Turkish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and deputy to the Permanent Representative of Turkey to the Council of Europe.

Loretta Baldassar is a Professor in the Discipline Group of Anthropology and Sociology at the University of Western Australia and Adjunct Principal Research Fellow at Monash University. She has published extensively on transnational mobility, with a focus on families, ageing, the second generation and students. She currently leads two Australian Research Council-funded projects: Ageing and New Media (with Raelene Wilding, La Trobe) and Mobile Transitions: Understanding the Effects of Transnational Mobility on Youth Transitions (with Anita Harris, Deakin University, and Shanthi Robertson, UWS).

John R. Campbell's research is mostly on Pacific Island countries, focusing on the human dimensions of natural disaster reduction and climate change adaptation. His recent work includes: participatory investigation of village relocation in Fiji; a regional survey of community relocation as a response to climatic variability and change; an investigation of the role of disaster relief; an evaluation of urban vulnerabilities in Pacific Island countries; and food security in the Pacific region. He was an author of the IPCC special report on Managing the Risks of Extreme Events and Disasters to Advance Climate Change Adaptation (SREX).

Rodolfo Casillas Ramírez is a Senior Professor and Researcher at the Facultad Latinoamericana de Ciencias Sociales (FLACSO, Mexico) and has conducted extensive research on Central American undocumented migration through Mexico’s southern border. His research interests include the conditions of unrecognised refugees, international transmigration through Mexico, Central American migrant children, humanitarian networks and immigration, human smuggling, and sex and human trafficking. He is the author of several books (four of them on trafficking in persons in Mexico) and multiple articles and reports on the conditions of Central American migrants travelling through Mexico.
Sarah Dickerson is a PhD candidate at the University of Maryland’s School of Public Policy, USA. Her dissertation research examines the impacts of maternal life satisfaction and depression on health behaviours and outcomes of children in Peru. Previously, she designed a micro-franchise programme for a township in South Africa, and was a researcher at the Carter Centre in Atlanta, Georgia. She has a Master’s degree in political economy from the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE).

Shoshana Fine was recently awarded a PhD in political science and international relations from CERI, Sciences Po, Paris, France, where she is currently a Research Associate and part-time lecturer. She also holds a BA in sociology from the University of Sussex, UK, and a joint Master’s in European studies from the University of Bath, UK and Sciences Po. Her research interests engage with critical approaches to migration, security and borders, particularly in relation to the EU and Turkey.

Luisa Feline Freier is Assistant Professor of Social and Political Sciences at the Universidad del Pacífico, Peru. She holds a PhD in government from LSE. Her research focuses on immigration and refugee policies in Latin America and south–south migration from countries in Africa, Asia and the Caribbean. In 2015, she co-edited a first volume on Latin American migration policies with David Cantor and Jean-Pierre Gauci. She has provided advice to international organisations such as the Naumann Foundation for Freedom, the International Organization for Migration (IOM), and the EU.

Andrew Geddes was appointed in 2017 to the Chair in Migration Studies at the European University Institute, Florence, Italy, where he is also Director of the Migration Policy Centre. For the period 2014–19 he holds an Advanced Investigator Grant awarded by the European Research Council for the project ‘Prospects for International Migration Governance’ (MIGPROSP). In 2016 he co-authored with Peter Scholten The Politics of Migration and Immigration in Europe (Sage).

Alexandra Masako Goossens is a PhD candidate in international law, affiliated with the Global Migration Centre, Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies, Geneva, Switzerland. She currently serves as a consultant for the International Organization for Migration (IOM), working principally on the World Migration Report 2018. She previously worked as a Research Assistant at the Global Migration Centre, carrying out legal research on migration and refugee law and governance.

Shirlena Huang is Associate Professor of Geography at the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences, National University of Singapore. She is also a member of the Steering Committee of the Faculty’s Migration Cluster. Her research focuses mainly on issues at the intersection of transnational migration, gender and family (with a particular focus on the themes of care labour migration and transnational families within the Asia-Pacific region) as well as on urbanisation and heritage conservation (particularly in Singapore).

Amarjit Kaur is Emeritus Professor of Economic History at the University of New England in Australia. She holds a PhD in economic history from Columbia University in New York, and previously taught at the University of Malaya. She is a Fellow of the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia and has published widely on international labour migration in Southeast Asia (including domestic workers, forced migration and refugees). The Australian Research Council, Welcome Trust (UK) and AusAID have mainly funded her research. She was a discussant for the World Bank/UNDP Roundtable Discussion on migration-related development issues in the Australia/New Zealand region.

Majella Kilkey is Reader in Social Policy at the University of Sheffield, where she is Co-Director of the Migration Research Group. She researches at the intersection of migration and family studies, focusing on the intra-EU mobility of EU citizens and the outward migration of UK nationals. Recent relevant publications include Gender, Migration and Domestic Work: Masculinities, Male Labour and Fathering in the UK and USA (with Diane Perrons, Ania Plomien, Pierrette Hondagneu-Sotelo and Hernan Ramirez, 2013) and Family Life in an Age of Migration and Mobility: Global Perspectives through the Life Course (co-edited with Ewa Palenga-Möllenbeck, 2016).

Karolina Kluczewska is a Marie Skłodowska-Curie Research Fellow at the University of St Andrews, Scotland. She is writing her PhD dissertation on development aid in Tajikistan, looking at interactions of international organisations with government, civil-society organisations and society. She has lived in Tajikistan since 2013, conducting small pieces of research and working for different development agencies, including the International Organization for Migration.

Oleg Korneev is Research Fellow at the Centre for Research into Local Action Initiatives (CERAL), University of Paris 13, France, and Leading Research Fellow at the Laboratory for Social Anthropological Research (LSAR), Tomsk State University, Russia. His research focuses on international organizations, global migration governance, expert knowledge, migration policies in Eastern Europe and Central Asia, and EU–Russia cooperation on migration governance. He is currently leading a research project exploring contestations of international organisations working in Central Asia (GLOBALCONTEST) funded by the French National Research Agency (ANR).

Mehdi Lahlou is Professor of Economics at the National Institute of Statistics and Applied Economics (INSEA), Rabat, Morocco and Associate Professor, Mohammed V University, Rabat. He is the author of several contributions and reports on the topics of migration, sustainable development in North Africa and sub-Saharan countries, water management and climate change, and education and employment. He was the founder (in 2006) of the Open University on Migration, Human Rights and Development, and a founding member of the ‘Common Good University’, Brussels (2002) and the World Alternative Forum on Water.

Theodora Lam is a Postdoctoral Fellow at the Asia Research Institute, National University of Singapore (NUS). She obtained her PhD in geography from NUS and her dissertation focused on understanding changing gender subjectivities, the web of care and relationships within the family in the wake of transnational labour migration. Her research covers transnational migration, children’s geographies and gender studies, and she has also published on themes relating to migration, citizenship and education.

Sabrina Marchetti is Associate Professor in Sociology at Ca’ Foscari University of Venice, Italy. She mainly specialises in issues of gender, racism, labour and migration, with a specific focus on the question of migrant domestic work. Since 2012, she has worked at the European University Institute as a Marie Curie Fellow and Jean Monnet Fellow. She has been post-doc Fellow at the Gender Excellence Programme of Linköping University,
Handbook of migration and globalisation

Sweden. Her books are Black Girls: Migrant Domestic Workers and Colonial Legacies (Brill 2014) and Employers, Agencies and Immigration: Paying for Care (Ashgate 2015, with Anna Triandafyllidou).

Marie McAuliffe is the Head of the Migration Policy Research Division in the IOM, Geneva, Switzerland and a doctoral candidate at the Australian National University (and on leave from the Australian immigration department). She is also a Senior Fellow at the Global Migration Centre at the Graduate Institute in Geneva and a visiting scholar at the Population Institute at Hacettepe University in Ankara, Turkey. She has published and edited in academic and policy spheres on irregular migration, refugees and asylum seekers, media and migration, and migrant smuggling. For three years (2012 to 2014), Marie directed the Australian irregular migration research programme.

Ulrike H. Meinhof is Professor of German and Cultural Studies at the University of Southampton, UK. Her EU-, ESRC- and AHRC-funded research has focused on cultural identities across such diverse subjects as the life stories of people in European border communities (EU border discourse), in multicultural cities and regions (Changing City Spaces, SeFoNe), and in migrant networks (TNMundi). These have led to academic publications and joint projects with filmmakers and musicians, most recently ‘Madagascar in the world: the impact of music on global concerns’, a project with Laterit Film for a music documentary Songs for Madagascar.

Laura Merla is Professor of Sociology at the Catholic University of Louvain, Belgium, where she is director of the Interdisciplinary Research Centre on Families and Sexualities (CIRFASE). She is also Honorary Research Fellow at the University of Western Australia. Her main research areas are the sociology of the family; migration, transnational families and care; ageing; social policies; and gender and masculinities.

Fabiola Mieres is Honorary Fellow in the Department of Geography at Durham University, UK, and Global Project Coordinator at the Global Union Federation Building and Wood Workers’ International (BWI) based in Geneva. She held a post-doctoral Research Associate position at Durham University (2014–16), where she conducted research on global initiatives that address forced labour in global supply chains as part of the EU-funded project ‘Demand-side Measures against Trafficking’ (DemandAT). She is currently researching labour standards in certification schemes in the forestry sector.

Irina Molodikova is Lead Researcher on the Project on Migration and Security in the Post-Soviet Space, Central European University (CEU), Budapest, Hungary. From 2008 to 2015, she was supervisor of the North Caucasus Initiative of Open Society Institute and Director of Migration Studies Seminar Programme for HESP OSI/CEU. She is the author and editor of numerous journal articles and books, including a textbook for schoolteachers in multi-ethnic regions.

Svitlana Odynets is a Research Fellow in the Department of Social Anthropology of the Ethnology Institute of National Academy of Science in Ukraine. Her research projects are concerned with women's temporary transnational migration between Ukraine and Italy; and changing post-imperial and national identity boundaries among Ukrainian migrants in Sweden after the Maidan 2013–14. She was a researcher on the EURA-NET project Transnational Migration in Transition: Transformative Characteristics

Michael P. K. Okyerefo is Associate Professor and Head, Department of Sociology, University of Ghana. He is a graduate of the universities of Ghana, Vienna and Cambridge. His other positions include Visiting Fellow, University of Cambridge, Centre of African Studies (2007–08); External Research Fellow, Global African Diaspora Studies (GADS) at the Institut für Afrikawissenschaften, University of Vienna (since 2014); and Sociologist of Culture and Sociologist of Religion. His interests range from the nexus of religion and culture, socio-economic, political and health processes in contemporary Ghana to migration, transnational networks and human capital formation among Ghanaians in the diaspora.

Caglar Ozden is a Lead Economist in the Development Research Group of the World Bank. He is a Fellow of IZA, CreAM and ERF. His research explores the nexus of globalisation of product and labour markets, government policies and economic development. He has edited three books and published numerous papers in leading academic journals. His current research projects explore the determinants and patterns of global labour mobility; impacts of migrants on the destination labour market outcomes; linkages between migration, trade and foreign direct investment flows; medical brain drain; and links between ageing and global economic integration.

Jajati Keshari Parida is currently an Assistant Professor, Centre for Economic Studies, Central University Punjab, India. Until recently, he was Deputy Director, National Institute of Labour Economics Research and Development, NITI Aayog, Government of India. He has several contributions in World Development, Social Indicators Research, Economic and Political Weekly and Indian Economic Review. His areas of research include migration, employment, regional development, poverty and human development.

Antoine Pécoud is Professor of Sociology at the University of Paris 13 and research associate at CERI, Sciences Po, France. Between 2003 and 2012, he worked as an international civil servant for UNESCO’s programme on international migration. He holds a PhD in social and cultural anthropology from the University of Oxford. His research investigates the global politics of migration, and especially the role of international organisations. His most recent book is Depoliticising Migration: Global Governance and International Migration Narratives (Palgrave Macmillan 2015).

K. Ravi Raman is currently a member, State Planning Board, Government of Kerala, India. Until recently, he was Senior Fellow at the Nehru Memorial Museum and Library, New Delhi and was a Visiting Fellow at Oxford, Cambridge and Manchester Universities for varying periods. He is also an Honorary Research Fellow in the Department of Development Studies, SOAS, London and affiliated researcher on egalitarianism, University of Bergen, Norway. He is the author of Global Capital and Peripheral Labour (Routledge 2010/2012/2015), among other publications.

Hillel Rapoport is Professor of Economics at the Paris School of Economics, University Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne, and scientific advisor at CEPII, Paris. He is also a Research Fellow at IZA, CESifo, the Harvard Center for International Development and the Kiel Institute for the World Economy. A member of the Economics Department of Bar-Ilan University until 2013, he also held visiting positions at Stanford University (2001–03) and the Harvard Kennedy School of Government (2009–11). His research focuses on the growth and developmental impact of migration, and on the economics of immigration, diversity and refugees’ relocation and resettlement.

Matteo Sandi pursued his PhD in economics at the University of Sussex and, in October 2015, joined the Centre for Economic Performance/Centre for Vocational Education Research (CEP/CVER) at LSE. His primary fields of interest are the economics of crime, the economics of migration and the economics of education. During his PhD, he consulted the World Bank Group and InterAnalysis. He holds an MSc in economics from the University of Sussex and a BSc in economics from the Catholic University of Milan.

Mary Boatemaa Setrana is a Lecturer at the Centre for Migration Studies, University of Ghana, Legon-Accra. Her PhD in migration studies was a sandwich programme between Radboud University, Nijmegen, the Netherlands and the University of Ghana. Her research interests include transnational migration and diaspora, migration, social change and development, migration and gender, return migration and the reintegration of international migrants into sub-Saharan Africa. She has published in both local and international journals.

Fanny Thornton is a legal academic at the University of Canberra, Australia. She holds a doctorate from the Australian National University. Her research and teaching focus on public international law, refugee law, human rights law and climate law. She specialises in the area of the international governance of migration and displacement in the climate change context. She is the author of a forthcoming book on this topic with Oxford University Press.

Anna Triandafyllidou is Full Professor at the Robert Schuman Centre for Advanced Studies, European University Institute in Florence, Italy where she heads the Research Area on Cultural Pluralism at the Global Governance Programme. Before joining the Programme in October 2012, she was part-time professor at the Robert Schuman Centre specialising in migration issues (2010–12). She has been Visiting Professor at the College of Europe in Bruges since 2002, and is the Editor-in-Chief of the Journal of Immigrant and Refugee Studies. Her latest books include What is Europe (2015, Palgrave, co-authored with R. Gropas), Global Governance from Regional Perspectives (2017, Oxford University Press, ed.), The Problem of Religious Diversity (2017, Edinburgh University Press, co-ed. with T. Modood), and the Routledge Handbook of Immigration and Refugee Studies (2016).

Ilse van Liempt is an Assistant Professor in Urban Geography and Qualitative Research Methods in the Human Geography Department, Utrecht University, the Netherlands. Her research centres on irregular migration, smuggling, trafficking, surveillance, gender and public space. Her PhD research on human smuggling towards the Netherlands was conducted at the Institute for Ethnic and Migration Studies (IMES) at the University of Amsterdam in 2007. Her thesis was published by Amsterdam University Press as Navigating Borders: Inside Perspectives on the Process of Human Smuggling into the Netherlands.
Xiaoyi Wang is a Professor at the Institute of Sociology, Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and the founder of the Centre for Rural Environmental Social Studies. He graduated from Nankai University in 1987 with a major in sociology. His interests include rural sociology, poverty reduction, migration, environmental protection, climate change adaptation and community development. He has rich work experience in evaluating poverty-reduction programmes. He has also written several books and articles exploring the linkage of migration to poverty and social processes of environmental change in China.

Bilesha B. Weeraratne is a Research Fellow at the Institute of Policy Studies of Sri Lanka (IPS), where she leads the research theme on migration and urbanisation. She was a Postdoctoral Research Associate at Princeton University. Her current research focuses on recruitment of migrant workers, impact evaluation of migration policies, implications of remittances on financial behaviour of left behind family, urban transportation and definition of urban areas. She holds a PhD in economics from the City University of New York.

Raelene Wilding is Associate Professor in Sociology at La Trobe University, Australia. Her research explores the intersections of families, intimacy, migration and communication technologies, with a focus on culturally and linguistically diverse Australians and their kin. She recently completed a project with young people from refugee backgrounds using multimedia to support positive settlement experiences. She is currently conducting research with older Australians from diverse backgrounds, exploring their uses of new media to access and provide social support and care from a distance. She recently published the book Families, Intimacy and Globalisation (Palgrave Macmillan, 2017), and her work also appears in diverse journals, including Global Networks, Journal of Refugee Studies and Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies.

Brenda S. A. Yeoh is Professor (Provost’s Chair) in the Department of Geography, and Research Leader of the Asian Migration Cluster at the Asia Research Institute, National University of Singapore (NUS). Her research interests include the politics of space in colonial and postcolonial cities, and she has worked and published on a wide range of migration research in Asia, such as: cosmopolitanism and highly skilled talent migration; gender, social reproduction and care migration; migration, national identity and citizenship issues; globalising universities and international student mobilities; and cultural politics, family dynamics and international marriage migrants.

Qian Zhang is a Researcher in the Department of Human Geography, Stockholm University, Sweden. She holds a DPhil in geography, with emphasis on human geography. In her monograph Pastoralists and the Environmental State: A Study of Ecological Resettlement in Inner Mongolia, China (2015), she investigated in depth the relationship between migration and environmental change and the dynamics of migration in resettlement projects. She has also co-authored several publications on Chinese labour migration to Sweden. Her current research focuses on the connections between local agricultural transformation and global integration.

Lyubov Zhyznomirska is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science, Saint Mary’s University, Canada. She studies the politics of migration and migration governance in Europe (with a focus on irregular migration) and issues of citizenship and belonging. She has a particular interest in the EU’s external migration relations and the impact on neighbouring countries. She has published in Comparative European Politics, Ethnicities and Review of European and Russian Affairs, and in edited collections on the EU’s relations with its eastern neighbourhood countries and on the externalisation of migration controls.