Contributors

Ingrid van Biezen is Professor of Comparative Politics and head of the Department of Political Science at Leiden University. She is a founding co-editor of the Routledge series on Political Parties and Party Systems, author of Political Parties in New Democracies (Palgrave 2003) and Financing Political Parties and Election Campaigns (Council of Europe 2003), editor of On Parties, Party Systems and Democracy (ECPR Press 2014) and co-editor of Regulating Political Parties (Leiden University Press 2014). As a principal investigator she has directed several large-scale research projects funded by the European Research Council, the Netherlands Organization for Scientific Research and the UK Economic and Social Research Council. She has published widely on comparative party politics, party organization, political finance, and democratic theory in, among other journals, the British Journal of Political Science, the European Journal of Political Research, European Review, Government and Opposition, Party Politics, Perspectives on Politics and West European Politics.

Manuela S. Blumenberg is head of the team National Survey Programmes at GESIS – Leibniz Institute for the Social Science. Her research is focused on comparative party financing, electoral behaviour and party systems.

Robert G. Boatright is Professor of Political Science at Clark University and Director of Research at the National Institute for Civil Discourse (NICD) at the University of Arizona. His research focuses on the effects of campaign and election laws on the behaviour of politicians and interest groups, with a particular attention to primary elections and campaign finance laws and practices. He is the author or editor of Getting Primaried: The Causes and Consequences of Congressional Primary Challenges; Interest Groups and Campaign Finance Reform in the United States and Canada; and The Deregulatory Moment? A Comparative Perspective on Changing Campaign Finance Laws.

Lou Brenez is Associate Researcher of the Centre d’études de la vie politique (CEVIPOF) of the Université libre de Bruxelles (ULB). She holds a PhD in political and social sciences from ULB. She authored or co-authored articles on the party system in post-Soviet Russia and on the financing of political parties in the post-Communist space and in France. She worked as rapporteur of France’s National Commission for Campaign Accounts and Political Financing from 2008 to 2014.

Shih-Hsien Chang is President of the Chinese Public Policy Studies Association, publisher of the Chinese Public Administration Review and Emeritus Professor at the Department of Public Administration and Policy, National Taipei University. He holds a PhD in political science from the National Cheng-Chi University. He has authored or co-authored more than one hundred books and articles on public administration and public policy.

Benjamin A. Dworkin received his PhD from Rutgers University. He is the Director of the Rebovich Institute for New Jersey Politics and teaches New Jersey politics at the Department of Political Science, Rider University.
Nubia Evertsson is a post-doctoral researcher at the Institute of Latin American Studies, Stockholm University. Her main areas of research are political corruption, state-corporate crime and crimes of the powerful.

Justin Fisher is Professor of Political Science and Director of the Magna Carta Institute at Brunel University London. He has published extensively on political finance, political parties, election campaigning and British and comparative politics more generally. He has acted as an adviser of political finance to the British government and the Council of Europe.

Abel François is a full professor of economics at University of Lille (LEM) and an affiliated researcher at LIEPP (Laboratory for Interdisciplinary Evaluation of Public Policies) at Sciences Po Paris. His current research deals with electoral campaign financing, electoral turnout and budgeting processes. He was convenor of the Groupe Argent et Politique (Money, Politics and Public Policy) of the French Political Science Association (AFSP). He has authored or co-authored 5 books, 18 chapters and 44 articles in leading journals such as the American Journal of Political Science, Public Choice and Journal of European Public Policy.

Asha Gupta, a former director at the Directorate of Hindi Medium Implementation and principal at Bharati College, University of Delhi, has been teaching political science for over 30 years. She has authored 13 books including Socialism in Theory and Practice, Changing Perspectives of the Welfare State, Privatization: A Global Perspective and Education in the 21st Century: Looking Beyond University. She also has 100 research papers to her credit. Currently, she is holding the position of Convener, International Political Science Association’s Research Committee on Welfare State and Developing Societies.

Fernando Jiménez is Associate (tenured) Professor of Political Science at the University of Murcia (Spain) and has served as an evaluator for the Third Round Evaluation (party funding) of GRECO (Group of States against Corruption) of the Council of Europe. He has taken part in the second opinion network for the EU Anti-Corruption Report of the European Commission.

Miguel Angel López Varas (MA, PhD, Essex) is a lecturer at the Institute of International Studies of the University of Chile. His research focuses on voting behaviour, elections, public opinion, estimation of policy positions and political communication.

Danielle May is an alumna of University College London, where she completed an MSc in democracy and comparative politics in 2016. She is interested in tackling corruption and inequality through strategic regulation of political finance policies. Currently, she works in the humanitarian sector with refugees and internally displaced persons, and is based in Erbil, Iraq. Her work has appeared in various international journals and volumes. She recently edited Finanziamento alla politica in Italia. Dai passato alle prospettive future (Carocci 2018).

Irma Méndez de Hoyos is a professor of political science at FLACSO Mexico and head of the Political Sciences Studies and Methods of the Mexican Association of Political Handbook of political party funding

Sciences National Council. Her research interests include the quality of democracy, party systems, electoral behaviour and malpractice in Mexico and Latin America, and public policy in Mexico and Latin America.

Jonathan Mendilow is a professor of political science and global studies at Rider University and the Chair of IPSA RC 20: Political Finance and Political Corruption. He has published extensively on the two subjects as well as party strategy and political theory.

Alix Meyer graduated from Sciences Po Lyon before receiving a PhD in American Civilization at Université Lyon 2. A former Fulbright scholar and recipient of the Agrégation d’anglais, he is now Associate Professor at the Université de Bourgogne Franche-Comté and a member of the Centre Interlangues – Texte, Image, Langage (EA 4182). He is the author of Les Républicains au Congrès, published in 2015 by the Presses Universitaires de Rennes.

Karl-Heinz Nassmacher is Professor Emeritus of Political Science at the Carl von Ossietzky University of Oldenburg (Germany). Currently he is life president of the IPSA Research Committee 20. He has authored many books and articles, mainly on political finance. His most recent book is The Funding of Party Competition (2009).

Felix-Christopher von Nostitz recently completed his PhD at the University of Exeter and is now a research assistant on various projects including the Regulating Civil Society project coordinated by Professor Nicole Bolleyer. His main research interests are party politics, intra-party democracy, political behaviour and participation. He recently published in Party Politics and Scandinavian Political Studies. He further is a Teaching Fellow at the European School of Political and Social Sciences at the Catholic University of Lille.

Holger Onken is a professor of comparative politics and international relations at Oldenburg university. His publications focus on party systems and party competition, with an emphasis on Germany.

Graeme Orr is a professor of law at the University of Queensland, Australia, specializing in the regulation of electoral contests and politics. His books include The Law of Politics (2010), Ritual and Rhythm in Electoral Systems (2015) and The Law of Deliberative Democracy (2016) and he is a former international editor of the Election Law Journal.

Ezequiel Martins Paz is a PhD candidate in political science at the Universidade Federal do Paraná (UFPR) where he earned his MA degree in the same area. Graduated in philosophy, he is currently researching political corruption and its relation with big company owners or high executives. He is a member of the Núcleo de Pesquisa em Sociologia Política Brasileira (NUSP – UFPR) and of the International Political Science Association Research Committee on Political Finance and Political Corruption.

Maxime Pelletier holds an Erasmus Mundus MA in public policy from the University of York and from The Hague’s International Institute of Social Studies, and is now a PhD candidate in political science at the University of Montréal. His research interests are corruption and political finance in established democracies.
Eric Phélippeau is Professor of Political Science in Paris-Nanterre University and a member of the Institute for Social Science of Politics (UMR 7220 CNRS). His research focuses on political finance and political corruption, ethics regulations in politics, and political professionalization.

Daniela R. Piccio is a post-doctoral fellow at the University of Turin. She holds a PhD in political science from the European University Institute and has previously studied political science at the University of Roma Tre and Leiden University. Her research interests are in the areas of comparative politics, political parties, political finance and political representation of social movements. Her work has appeared in various international journals and edited volumes.

Michael Pinto-Duschinsky is president of the IPSA Research Committee on Political Finance and Political Corruption having been an officer of the Committee since 1973. He spent his academic career at Merton College, Oxford, Pembroke College, Oxford and Brunel University. He has advised governments and international organizations on constitutional issues, especially political finance, in 25 countries. As International IDEA’s lead writer for its Handbook on Funding of Political Parties and Election Campaigns, he created the database on political finance laws. He was a founder governor of the Westminster Foundation for Democracy, director of the International Foundation for Electoral System, member of the United Kingdom Commission on the Bill of Rights, and long-term consultant and witness to the UK Committee on Standards in Public Life on issues related to political finance.

Vicente Chua Reyes Jr is with the School of Education, University of Queensland, Australia. He is a fellow of the Centre for Chinese Studies of the Republic of China (Taiwan), the National Taiwan Normal University and the University of Macau (China). He is also a visiting academic at the Institute of Education, University of London. His latest book published by Routledge is entitled Mapping the Terrain of Education Reform: Global Trends and Local Responses in the Philippines (2016).

Giulia Sandri is an associate professor at the European School of Political and Social Sciences of the Catholic University of Lille. She was previously a research fellow at Christ Church and at the Department of Politics and International Relations of the University of Oxford. Her main research interests are party politics, intra-party democracy and political behaviour. She recently co-edited with Fulvio Venturino and Antonella Seddone a book entitled Party Primaries in Comparative Perspective (Ashgate-Routledge 2015).

Susan E. Scarrow is John and Rebecca Moores Professor of Political Science at the University of Houston (USA). Her research in comparative politics focuses on political parties, political finance and representation. Her recent books include Beyond Party Members (2015) and Organizing Political Parties: Representation, Participation, and Power (2017, co-editor).

Victor Shale holds a PhD in politics from the University of South Africa. His research interests include political parties, elections and conflict management. Shale has undertaken expert-level assignments for the African Union, Southern African Development Community, Commonwealth, East African Community, International IDEA and the Netherlands Institute for Multiparty Democracy.
Vit Simral holds a PhD in political science. He developed research projects in the field of corruption studies. Currently, he is pursuing two post-doc projects on the regulation of political finance at the local level and on transparent lobbying. In addition to his academic work, he is involved in the activities of the European NGO sector, where he puts his theoretical research into practice.

Jef Smulders is a PhD fellow of the Research Foundation – Flanders (FWO), affiliated to the KU Leuven Public Governance Institute. His research interests include political finance and party organization. He also has considerable expertise on party and campaign finance in Belgium. His work has been published in journals such as Government and Opposition, Local Government Studies and Election Law Journal.

Samuel Uwem Umoh is a mentor, facilitator and senior tutor at the University of Kwazulu-Natal, South Africa. Prior to that position, he was a research assistant tutor in tourism. Samuel holds a master’s degree in history and strategic studies with years of teaching experience at the tertiary level. At university level he has taught modules on South African history before apartheid and South Africa and the outside world, at the University of Kwazulu-Natal, South Africa. He is also a PhD scholar with a keen research interest in elites, democratic institutions, African history, party funding, elections and migration studies.

Manuel Villoria is Professor of Political Science at the University King Juan Carlos and Director of the Good Governance Observatory. His main fields of interest and publications address government, public management and administrative ethics.

Wouter Wolfs is a researcher at the KU Leuven Public Governance Institute (Belgium). He has conducted research on the European Parliament, national parliaments and political finance methodology. He is preparing a PhD on the finance of European political parties and European political foundations.