
Contributors

Laura Alfors is a Research Associate in the Department of Sociology at Rhodes University in South Africa and the Director of the Social Protection Programme at the global action-research-policy network Women in Informal Employment: Globalizing and Organizing (WIEGO). Laura's research interests centre on the intersections of social policy, urban policy and employment, particularly informal employment. Her most recent articles appear in the International Social Security Review, Environment and Urbanization and Agenda.

Armando Barrientos is Emeritus Professor of Poverty and Social Justice at the Global Development Institute at the University of Manchester in the UK. His research interests focus on the linkages existing between welfare programmes and labour markets in developing countries, and on policies addressing poverty, vulnerability and population ageing. His most recent books are Social Protection for the Poor and Poorest (co-editor with D. Hulme, Palgrave, 2008); Just Give Money to the Poor (co-author with J. Hanlon and D. Hulme, Kumarian Press, 2010) and Social Assistance in Developing Countries (Cambridge University Press, 2015).

Jo Beall is a Professorial Research Fellow at the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE), UK. Her expertise lies in international development policy, particularly in the context of cities. She was formerly on the Executive Board of the British Council, Deputy Vice Chancellor at University of Cape Town, South Africa, and Professor in International Development at the LSE. Her specialist research interests are gender and social development; urban development and governance; and cities in conflict-affected states. She has significant research experience in South Africa, Pakistan and Afghanistan and has also undertaken research and policy advice in Colombia, Bangladesh, India, and in a number of African countries.

Amrita Datta is an Assistant Professor of Development Studies at the Department of Liberal Arts, Indian Institute of Technology, Hyderabad. Amrita's research interests are in the areas of rural–urban migration, gender and development, and village and longitudinal studies. Her research has been published in several edited volumes and journals such as the Journal of Development Studies, Children's Geographies, Indian Journal of Labour Economics and the Economic and Political Weekly. She was an Associate Editor of the Indian Journal of Human Development from 2014–16.

Hartley Dean is Professor of Social Policy at the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE), UK. His 30-year academic career was preceded by a 12-year career as a welfare rights worker in a deprived multicultural inner-London neighbourhood, which is where the practical foundations of his commitment to social policy were laid. The focus of his teaching and research has stemmed from his concerns with poverty, social justice and welfare rights. He is now part-retired, but currently working to produce an extensively revised edition of his earlier work on Understanding Human Need (first published by Policy Press, 2010). His other recent publications include: Social Policy (Polity, 2006, 2012 and 2018, plus Chinese language editions), Social Rights and Human Welfare (Routledge, 2015), Social Advantage and Disadvantage (co-editor with L. Platt, Oxford University Press, 2016). He is a past editor of the Journal of Social Policy.

Karl Falkenberg has been a European Union (EU) official for the last 40 years, responsible for both international trade negotiations and environmental policies. He represented the EU in the Rio+20 Conference and participated as Senior Negotiator in the negotiations for the establishment of the UN Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). He wrote a report to the EU Commission on the implementation of the SDGs in the EU, titled 'Sustainability Now'. He was attached to Oxford University, UK as a Senior Fellow and now works as an independent consultant and lecturer on sustainability issues.

Roosa Jolkkonen is a DPhil candidate/researcher at the Department of Social Policy and Intervention at the University of Oxford, UK. Her research interests comprise third sector actors, transnational social policy transfer and social policies in the Global South, with a regional focus on sub-Saharan Africa. Her doctoral study examines contemporary philanthropic development aid and the distinctiveness of its social policy influence within the changing aid landscape. She has previously worked in research positions at national and international institutions.

Dina Kiwan is Reader in Comparative Education, University of Birmingham, UK. In 2015–2016, she was the Centre for Lebanese Studies Fellow at St Antony's College, University of Oxford, UK; and previously was Associate Professor in Sociology at the American University of Beirut, Lebanon, from 2012 to 2016. Her research programme focuses on citizenship and inclusion, and is interdisciplinary and comparative in scope. Her interests centre around sociological and politico-philosophical examinations of inclusive citizenship through the lens of education policy, naturalization policy and migration policy, in particular in the context of pluralist and multicultural societies, and also societies in conflict. This critical policy analysis is complemented by the study of the ‘marginalized’ and ‘vulnerable’ and how they constitute themselves as political actors. Her book Education for Inclusive Citizenship (Routledge, 2008) was awarded Second Prize for Best Book in Education published in 2008 by the Society for Educational Studies.

Huck-ju Kwon is Professor at Graduate School of Public Administration, and the Asia Development Institute, Seoul National University, Korea. His research interest is in global social policy, international development cooperation and political theory of social policy. He is co-editor of Global Social Policy. His publications include ‘Poverty Reduction and Good Governance’ (Development and Change 45(2), 2014), Transforming the Developmental Welfare State in East Asia (Palgrave, 2005), and ‘Implications of the Sustainable Development Goals for Global Social Policy’ (Global Social Policy 17(2), 2017).

James Lee is formerly Professor and Head of the Department of Applied Social Sciences at the Hong Kong Polytechnic University. He specializes in comparative housing and social policy in East Asia. His research focuses on home ownership, asset-based housing policy and social development with a special interest on institutional arrangements facilitating both social and economic objectives. He publishes in international journals such as Housing Studies, Pacific Review, Policy and Politics, Environment and Planning and Economic Geography. His representative books include Social Policy and Change in East Asia (Lexington Books, 2014), The Crisis of Welfare in East Asia (Lexington Books, 2007), Housing and Social Change: East West Perspectives (Routledge, 2003) and Housing, Home Ownership and Social Change in Hong Kong (Ashgate, 1999).

Antoinette Lombard is Professor in Social Work and Head of the Department of Social Work and Criminology at the University of Pretoria, South Africa. Her research focus includes developmental social work and social development. She has a keen research interest in social work’s contribution to sustainable development. Her research has contributed to the conceptualization of developmental social work in South Africa. In 2015, she received a national award from the Minister of Science and Technology as the second runner-up of the Distinguished Women in Science Award (WISA) in the category Humanities and Social Sciences. She has been a member of the Academy of Science of South Africa (ASSAF) since 2017, and is a rated researcher at the South African National Research Foundation.

Francie Lund is a South African who initially trained as a sociologist and social worker. She taught in the School of Development Studies at the University of KwaZulu-Natal, South Africa. Her abiding interest in epistemological issues led her to combine quantitative and qualitative research methods. Changing Social Policy: The Child Support Grant in South Africa (HSRC Press, 2008) is her account of chairing the Lund Committee on Child and Family Support in 1995, which led to the first significant post-apartheid social policy reform, the introduction of a cash transfer for children. She was Director of the Social Protection Programme of the global research and advocacy network, Women in Informal Employment: Globalizing and Organizing (WIEGO), exploring possibilities for improved social protection for poorer informal women workers in the Global South and North. She has worked as researcher and policy consultant for many international organizations and agencies such as the Africa Union, International Labour Organization (ILO), the European Commission, the World Bank, UN Women, UN Research Institute for Social Development, the United Kingdom's Department for International Development.

Philip Mader holds the position of Research Fellow at the Institute of Development Studies in Brighton, UK. As a sociologist and political economist, he works on finance, money, labour and development. He is the author of The Political Economy of Microfinance: Financializing Poverty (Palgrave Macmillan, 2015) and an editor of the Routledge International Handbook of Financialization (co-editor with Daniel Mertens and Natascha van der Zwan, forthcoming). His research at the Max Planck Institute for the Study of Societies (Cologne, Germany) was awarded the German Thesis Award and the Otto Hahn Medal.

James Midgley is Professor of the Graduate School, University of California, Berkeley, USA. He previously served as the Dean of the School of Social Welfare (1997 to 2006) and held the Harry and Riva Specht Chair in Public Social Services from 1997 to 2016 when he retired from full-time academic work. He has published widely on issues of social development, international social welfare and social policy. Among his most recent books are Social Development: Theory and Practice (SAGE, 2014), Social Welfare for a Global Era: International Perspectives on Policy and Practice (SAGE, 2017), Future Directions in Social Development (co-editor with Manohar Pawar; Palgrave, 2017) and Social Investment and Social Welfare: International and Critical Perspectives (co-editor with Espen Dahl and Amy Conley Wright, Edward Elgar Publishing, 2017). He is a Fellow of the American Academy of Social Work and Social Welfare and has held honorary professorial appointments at Nihon Fukushi University in Japan, the University of Johannesburg in South Africa, Hong Kong Polytechnic University, and Sun Yat-sen University in China.

Solène Morvant-Roux is assistant professor in socioeconomy at the University of Geneva, Switzerland; she is sponsored by the Swiss National Science Foundation (SNSF). Her research looks at financialization of the social reproduction of diverse population segments of the Global South. At the macro level her research is part of a critical approach to understanding the accumulation processes unfolding on the frontiers of global finance. She mostly works in Mexico (rural and peri-urban settings). She has been involved in several important research projects and has published several peer-reviewed papers and books.

Leila Patel is the South African Research Chair in Welfare and Social Development and the Director of the Centre for Social Development in Africa (CSDA) at the University of Johannesburg, South Africa. She has published widely on issues of social development in South Africa and internationally. Professor Patel's research interests include social welfare policy, social protection, gender, care, the social services and children and youth. Her work experience spans academia, government, non-profit organisations and private sector social involvement initiatives. She was the former Director General of Welfare in the Mandela government and played a leading role in the development of South Africa's welfare policy after apartheid. Her recent books are Development, Social Policy and Community Action: Lessons from Below (co-editor with Marianne Ulriksen, HSRC Press, 2017), Social Welfare and Social Development (Oxford University Press, 2015) and Social Protection in Southern Africa (co-editor with James Midgley and Marianne Ulriksen, Routledge, 2014). In 2014 she received the Distinguished Woman Scientist Award in the Humanities and the Social Sciences from the South African Ministry of Science and Technology and National Research Foundation.

Manohar Pawar is Professor of Social Work, School of Humanities and Social Sciences, a member of the Institute for Land Water and Society, Charles Sturt University, Australia, and is the President of the International Consortium for Social Development. He has received several honours and awards, including an invitation to deliver the 2017 Hokenstad International lecture, USA; a Lifetime Achievement Award 2017 by the National Association of Professional Social Workers in India; and the citation award for outstanding contributions to student learning from the Australian Learning and Teaching Council, 2008. His interests and publications include: Empowering Social Workers: Virtuous Practitioners (co-editor with R. Hugman, A. Alexabdra and A.W. Anscombe, Springer, 2017), Future Directions in Social Development (co-editor with J. Midgley, Palgrave Macmillan, 2017), Social and Community Development Practice (SAGE, 2014), Reflective Social Work Practice (with A.B. Anscombe, Cambridge University Press, 2015), Water and Social Policy (Palgrave Macmillan, 2014), International Social Work (with D. Cox, SAGE, 2013) and SAGE Handbook of International Social Work (co-editor with K. Lyons, T. Hokenstad, N. Huegler and N. Hall, SAGE, 2012).

Michael Rogan is an Associate Professor in the Neil Aggett Labour Studies Unit (NALSU) at Rhodes University in South Africa and a research associate in the global research-policy-action network Women in Informal Employment: Globalizing and Organizing (WIEGO). He holds a PhD and a Masters degree from the University of KwaZulu-Natal, South Africa and a Bachelor of Arts in International Studies from the University of Washington in Seattle, USA. Professor Rogan's recent work has focused largely on informal employment, gender, poverty, food security, education and skills development, and survey design.

Rebecca Surender is a Pro Vice-Chancellor for Equality and Diversity at the University of Oxford, UK. She holds a Senior Research Fellowship at the Department for Social Policy and Intervention at Oxford, and is a Fellow of Green Templeton College. Professor Surender's research and publications are primarily in the area of health and social policy in developing countries. She has worked as a consultant and advisor for various multilateral and government agencies including the World Bank, United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) and the UK Department for International Development (DFID) and she is currently a Visiting Fellow at the Institute of Social and Economic Research (ISER) at Rhodes University, South Africa. Previous edited books and monographs include Social Policy in a Developing World (co-editor with R. Walker, Edward Elgar Publishing, 2013), Attitudes to Work and Social Security in South Africa (with P. Ntshongwana and M. Noble, HSRC Press, 2007) and Welfare State Change: Towards a Third Way? (co-editor with J. Lewis, Oxford University Press, 2004).

Mayumi Terano is the Expert for Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA), working as the Academic Advisor for the Faculty of International Business and Humanities / Liberal Arts and Culture Center at Egypt–Japan University of Science and Technology, Egypt. She is also a Visiting Researcher for the Institute of Education, University College London, UK. She specializes in social and comparative analysis in education, focused mainly on higher education policy and administration. Her publication and professional works are concerned with internationalization of higher education, education and social justice, and education policy reform in development contexts.

Marian Urbina-Ferretjans is a Program Management Specialist at the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO) in Washington, DC, USA. Her research interests focus on global social policy and South–South and triangular cooperation in the social and health sectors. She was an International Research Fellow of the Japan Society for the Promotion of Science (JSPS), at the United Nations University – Institute for the Advanced Study of Sustainability (UNU-IAS) in Tokyo. She has also worked for the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) in the Latin America and the Caribbean Division in New York, and in the Philippines and China Country Offices. She obtained her doctorate in social policy from the University of Oxford, UK.

Amrit Virk is a researcher based at the Nuffield Centre for International Health and Development at the University of Leeds, UK. In the past, she has taught Social Policy at the University of Oxford, UK and Thammasat University, Thailand. Amrit’s research and publications are generally in the area of health policy and health systems research, spanning work in Sierra Leone, India, Thailand, Malaysia and Singapore.

Nicola Yeates is Professor of Social Policy in the Department of Social Policy and Criminology at the Open University. She has published widely on social policy and social development internationally through the lens of globalizing and regionalizing processes. An ongoing theme of her research is how social diversity, divisions and inequalities are constructed, manifested and contested through myriad trans-border social processes. Recent books include Understanding Global Social Policy (Policy Press, 2nd edn 2014), The Global Social Policy Reader (co-editor with C. Holden, Policy Press, 2009), Globalising Care Economies and Migrant Workers (Palgrave, 2009), World-Regional Social Policy and Global Governance (co-editor with B. Deacon, M.C. Macovei and L. Van Langenhove, Routledge, 2010) and Health Worker Migration and Recruitment: Global Governance, Politics and Policy (with J. Pillinger, Routledge, 2019).

