

Acknowledgements

We would like to thank the remarkable scholars who participated in this volume for their imaginative and innovative ways of interpreting and making sense of leadership and leaders through popular culture. In addition, we wish to thank the editors and editorial team at Edward Elgar (including Alan Sturmer, Karissa Venne, Melanie Marshall and Michaela Doyle) for their patience and willingness to take a risk on popular culture, and the New Horizons in Leadership Studies Series Editor, Joanne Ciulla, for accepting the volume and allowing us to proceed with such a non-traditional topic. We are grateful to Elizabeth DeBusk-Maslanka for her careful eye for detail and excellent advice, and to Dean Sandra Peart and the Jepson School of Leadership Studies for their support. Kim would also like to thank Kristin for her mentorship, unflagging efforts and friendship, and Kristin is similarly appreciative of all Kim's hard work and tracking down of possible contributors, editing, commenting and writing two superb chapters (one on very short notice), in addition to coming up with the genesis for the volume in the first place. Finally, we would like to thank our friends and family, of both the human and furry varieties, for their patience and understanding as we put together this volume.
