

Contributors

---

Andrew Blick is Director of History and Policy and Senior Lecturer in Politics and Contemporary History, King's College London. He is the author of numerous works on UK constitutional history and democratic reform. He has worked in the UK Parliament, for various think tanks, and in the Prime Minister's Office. He has been a consultant to democratic promotion initiatives in countries including Iran, Morocco, Pakistan, Turkey and Ukraine.

Peter Munk Christiansen is Professor and Head of the Department of Political Science, Aarhus University. His research interests are the organization of political advice, the political role of interest groups and the exploitation of knowledge in the policy process. He is the author of several books and has published in journals such as Comparative Political Studies, Journal of Public Administration Research and Theory, Public Administration, Governance, Journal of European Public Policy, West European Politics and Legislative Studies Quarterly.

Bernadette Connaughton is Lecturer in the Department of Politics and Public Administration at the University of Limerick, Ireland. Her research interests include Europeanization, politico-administrative relations and the implementation of environmental policy. She has published in journals such as Journal of Environmental Policy and Planning, Public Administration, Irish Political Studies and Regional and Federal Studies and contributed the Irish case to several comparative public administration studies.

Jonathan Craft is Assistant Professor, Department of Political Science, University of Toronto. He specializes in comparative public policy and administration, policy analysis and Canadian politics. He is the author of Backrooms and Beyond: Partisan Advisers and the Politics of Policy Work in Canada (2016) and co-editor of Policy Work in Canada: Professional Practices and Analytical Capacities (2017). A full list of his publications, teaching, and current projects can be found at www.jonathancraft.ca.

Chris Eichbaum is Reader in Government in the School of Government and Associate Dean (Learning and Teaching) in the Victoria Business School, Victoria University of Wellington/Te Whare Wānanga o Te Ūpoko o te Ika a Māui, New Zealand. He is a former head of the School of Government and also held the position of Vice Provost (Academic and Equity) at Victoria University. Chris Eichbaum has worked in the Australian and New Zealand public service and was a political and policy adviser to three New Zealand prime ministers. His research interests include the role of political staff in executive government, governance and public administration reform, the politics of central banking and social democratic politics. With Richard Shaw he co-authored Public Policy in New Zealand: Institutions, Processes and Outcomes (2005, 2008, 2011) and co-edited Partisan Appointees and Public Servants: An International Analysis of the Role of the Political Adviser (2010). He and Shaw have published widely on politicization and public service neutrality, including in journals such as Public Administration and Governance.

Athanassios Gouglas is a postdoctoral researcher at the KU Leuven Public Governance Institute, Belgium. His research interests include comparative politics, in particular political elite circulation and legislative turnover, as well as public policy – in particular political advisers and policy advice utilization. He has previously worked as a civil servant in the Hellenic Civil Service, as a political and policy adviser in two ministerial cabinets, and as a policy adviser in the cabinet of a thematic vice-head of a regional authority in Greece.

Thurid Hustedt is Guest Professor at the Otto-Suhr-Institute of Political Science at Freie Universität Berlin where she teaches German politics and government. Prior to her current position, she was a postdoctoral researcher at the University of Potsdam. Thurid Hustedt holds a Master's degree in Public Administration and a PhD from the University of Potsdam, and her research focuses on political-administrative relations, policy advice and policy advisory systems and government coordination.

Maria Maley is Senior Lecturer in the School of Politics and International Relations at the Australian National University. She has worked as a public servant and as a ministerial adviser. Her research focuses on the work of political advisers; political-administrative relations; comparative advisory institutions and the careers of politicians and political advisers. Her Australian Research Council-funded research focuses on public servants who work as political advisers.

Birgitta Niklasson is Associate Professor in Political Science at the University of Gothenburg. Her research focuses on bureaucratic structures and gender, more specifically on the politicization of public administration and career paths of politicians and civil servants. She is currently working on a research project on gender and diplomacy in the Swedish Ministry for Foreign Affairs, funded by the Swedish Research Council. Niklasson's work has appeared in journals such as Public Administration, West European Politics and Foreign Policy Analysis.

Patrik Öhberg is Associate Professor in Political Science at the University of Gothenburg. Öhberg has a wide research interest in theories and practices of representative democracy. Specific interests include the perceptions and behaviours of political and administrative elites. His work is published in journals such as British Journal of Political Science, Comparative Political Studies and West European Politics. His latest book, Ambitious Politicians: The Implications of Career Ambition in Representative Democracy, was published in 2017.

Heidi Houlberg Salomonsen is Associate Professor at the Department of Management, Aarhus University. Her research interests include relationships between top civil servants, advisers and ministers, public management and strategic communication in the public sector, especially communication related to reputation management, government communication, mediatization and leadership. She has contributed to and edited books in relation to these issues as well as published in journals such as Public Administration, Journal of European Public Policy, International Review of Administrative Science, Administration and Society and International Journal of Strategic Communication.

Richard Shaw is Professor of Politics and Director (Arts Education) at Massey University/Te Kunenga ki Pūrehuroa, New Zealand and has published widely on theoretical and empirical matters relating to political advisers. With Chris Eichbaum he is co-author of Public Policy in New Zealand: Institutions, Processes and Outcomes (2005, 2008, 2011) and co-editor of Partisan Appointees and Public Servants: An International Analysis of the Role of the Political Adviser (2010). His work has appeared in journals such as Public Administration, Governance, Political Studies Review, Parliamentary Affairs and Public Management Review.

Caspar van den Berg is Professor of Governance and Director of the Graduate School Campus Fryslân at the University of Groningen, The Netherlands. He earned his PhD at Leiden University in 2011 with a dissertation on the impact of European integration on the national civil service systems of The Netherlands, Britain and France, which was awarded the Van Poelje Prize for best dissertation in the administrative and policy sciences in The Netherlands and Flanders. He previously held a visiting fellowship at Princeton University (2013–14) and a visiting professorship at Tallinn University of Technology (2014–15). His present research focuses on political-administrative relations in comparative perspective and the use of external policy advice by senior civil servants.