

Acknowledgements

We have had the immense pleasure over the course of two years to collaborate with leading scholars across the globe in producing this book. We are grateful for this privilege and for the honour to have been able to convene such an illustrious group of scholars around the theme of law and the Sustainable Development Goals.

We wish to thank in particular Jean Claude Ashukem and Caiphas Soyapi from the North-West University, South Africa for their assistance in the editorial management and proofreading processes.

Colleagues at both our respective institutions, North-West University and the University of Lincoln, United Kingdom, have supported us in this project. In particular, Professor French wishes to thank those colleagues who participate in the Lincoln Centre for Environmental Law and Justice for providing a base for such rich discussion on environmental matters in Lincoln.

Finally, we wish to extend a special word of thanks to our outstanding publishing team at Edward Elgar Publishing, which has guided the conceptualisation, execution and publication of this book according to the highest professional standards of care.
