
Acknowledgments

This volume is very much a collective effort. Robin West and Cynthia Grant Bowman, the co-editors, are immensely grateful for each other's talents, support and commitment, without which this wonderful collection of essays would never have seen fruition. We would also like to thank our research assistants, Ryan McAnally, Alison Smith, and Molly Nelson, the library staff at both Georgetown and Cornell law schools, and our administrative assistants, Ashley Freeman, Elizabeth Moulton, Lyndsey Clark, and Ernestine DaSilva for their work on this collection. We both thank the editors and administrative staff at Edward Elgar Publishing for all they have added to it. Mostly, however, we thank the authors for their insight, their writing, their passion, and their dedication to seeing this project through to completion. Sylvia Law would also like to thank Natalie Nicelli, NYU Law class of 2018, and Susan Appleton would like to thank Cora Allen, Washington University School of Law class of 2019. Orit Kamir wishes to express gratitude to the volume's editors for their support and would like to dedicate her work on the volume to the memory of her mother, Shulamit Kamir, a Holocaust survivor who cherished human and animal dignity, and died as this book was going to press.
