

Contributors

Zack Cooper is Senior Fellow for Asian Security at the Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS), Washington. Dr Cooper has authored numerous CSIS studies, including Countering Coercion in Maritime Asia: The Theory and Practice of Gray Zone Coercion; Asia-Pacific Rebalance 2025: Capabilities, Presence, and Partnerships; The ANZUS Alliance in an Ascending Asia; Federated Defense in Asia; Assessing the Asia-Pacific Rebalance; Strategic Japan; and Postwar Japan. His research has also appeared in Security Studies, the Washington Quarterly, the National Interest and International Security, and he works closely with the CSIS Asia Maritime Transparency Initiative. Prior to joining CSIS, Dr Cooper worked as a research fellow at the Center for Strategic and Budgetary Assessments. He previously served on the White House staff as assistant to the Deputy National Security Adviser for Combating Terrorism. He also worked as a civil servant in the Pentagon, first as a foreign affairs specialist and then as a special assistant to the Principal Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Policy. He received a BA from Stanford University and an MPA, MA, and PhD from Princeton University.

Ian Hall is a Professor in the School of Government and International Relations at Griffith University and a member of both the Centre for Governance and Public Policy and the Griffith Asia Institute. He is also a Fellow of the Australia India Institute at the University of Melbourne. He is currently working on a project on India and the liberal international order.

Ryosuke Hanada joined the Japan Institute of International Affairs (JIIA) as a research fellow in 2016 and is a PhD candidate at the Australian National University. His main research interests are Japan's foreign policy in the Indo-Pacific region, with a particular focus on Japan's relations with Australia and India, and maritime security issues in the region. Mr Hanada obtained an MA from the University of Warwick and his BA in Law from Waseda University.

Michael Heazle is an Associate Professor with the Griffith Asia Institute and Griffith University's School of Government and International Relations where he teaches international relations and politics. From 1992 to 2000, Dr Heazle was a regular contributor to the Far Eastern Economic Review, and wrote for a number of other domestic and international media. Dr Heazle has researched and published in the areas of energy, human and environmental security; policy making and the treatment of specialist advice; China–Japan relations; and Northeast Asia security. His works include a collection of books and edited volumes with various university presses and publishers (University of Washington Press, Cambridge University Press, Earthscan/Routledge, Edward Elgar Publishing) and research articles in various peer-reviewed journals including Marine Policy, Environmental Science and Policy, Intelligence and National Security, The Pacific Review and the Australian Journal of International Affairs.

Van Jackson, PhD, is a Senior Lecturer in International Relations at Victoria University of Wellington, and the Defence & Strategy Fellow at the Centre for Strategic Studies in New Zealand. He also hosts the podcast series Pacific Pundit, and is author of Rival Reputations: Coercion and Credibility in US–North Korea Relations (Cambridge University Press, 2016). Van's research, which primarily focuses on the intersection of US strategy and the Asia-Pacific, has appeared in International Studies Review, Journal of Global Security Studies, Journal of Strategic Studies, Foreign Policy Analysis, International Relations of the Asia-Pacific, Asian Security, Naval War College Review, Contemporary Security Policy, Asia Policy, and Comparative Strategy. He is a former Council on Foreign Relations International Affairs Fellow, and from 2009–14 served in the Office of the US Secretary of Defense as a strategist and policy adviser.

Rikki Kersten is Dean of the School of Arts at Murdoch University. She specializes in Japanese history, politics, security policy and foreign policy and has a special interest in Australia–Japan relations, and in the US–Japan alliance. Educated at Adelaide and Oxford universities, Professor Kersten has held research attachments to various tertiary institutions in Japan, including the University of Tokyo and Keio University. Previously, Professor Kersten spent five years in the Australian Foreign Service, and served in the Political Section of the Australian Embassy in Tokyo. Professor Kersten has taught modern Japanese history at Sydney and Leiden Universities and served as Director of the Research Institute for Asia and the Pacific at the University of Sydney. Before joining Murdoch, she was Dean of the College of Asia and the Pacific, Dean of the Faculty of Asian Studies, and a Professor of Modern Japanese Political History at the Australian National University in Canberra.

Sheryn Lee is an Associate Lecturer at the Department of Security Studies and Criminology, Macquarie University, Sydney. She completed her PhD at the Strategic and Defence Studies Centre (SDSC), the Australian National University in 2017. She was previously a non-resident WSD-Handa Fellow at Pacific Forum, Center for Strategic and International Studies; and holds an AM in Political Science from the University of Pennsylvania, where she was a Benjamin Franklin Fellow and Mumford Fellow. She was also a T.B. Millar scholar at the SDSC and Robert O'Neill scholar at the International Institute of Strategic Studies (IISS)-Asia in Singapore. She is also a regular contributor to East Asia Forum.

Satoru Mori is Professor of International Politics and US Foreign Relations in the Department of Global Politics (Faculty of Law) at Hosei University. He holds a PhD from the University of Tokyo, LLM degrees from Columbia University Law School and Kyoto University, and an LLB degree from Kyoto University. He has been a visiting researcher at Princeton University (2014–15) and at George Washington University (2013–15). His book Vietnam War and Alliance Diplomacy (in Japanese, University of Tokyo Press, 2009) was awarded the Hiroshi Shimizu Prize by the Japanese Association of American Studies in 2010. Dr Mori is a recipient of the 2015 Nakasone Yasuhiro Incentive Award and served as a diplomat in the Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs from 1996 to 2001.

Andrew O'Neil is Dean (Research) and Professor of Political Science in the Griffith Business School. Prior to being appointed Dean in April 2016, he was Head of the School of Government and International Relations (2014–16) and Director of the Griffith Asia Institute (2010–14). Before coming to Griffith in 2010, Andrew was Associate Head (Research) in the Faculty of Social Sciences at Flinders University, and prior to entering academia he worked as a Commonwealth public servant. Andrew's research expertise focuses on the intersection of strategic, political and economic change in Asia with particular emphasis on the security dimension of international relations, and he is a frequent media commentator on these topics. Working in teams, Andrew is the recipient of ARC Discovery and Linkage Project funding, and he has also received competitive industry funding from the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, the Japan Foundation, and the Department of Defence. He is a former member of the Australian Foreign Minister's National Consultative Committee on National Security Issues and former advisory board member of the Lowy Institute's G20 Studies Centre.

Mira Rapp-Hooper is a Senior Fellow with the Asia-Pacific Security Program at CNAS. She is formerly a Fellow with the CSIS Asia Program and Director of the CSIS Asia Maritime Transparency Initiative. Her expertise includes Asia security issues, deterrence, nuclear strategy and policy, and alliance politics. She was previously a Stanton Nuclear Security Fellow at the Council on Foreign Relations. Dr Rapp-Hooper's academic writings have appeared in Political Science Quarterly, Security Studies and Survival. Her policy writings have appeared in The National Interest, Foreign Affairs and The Washington Quarterly, and her analysis has been featured in The New York Times, The Washington Post and on NPR and the BBC, among others. Dr Rapp-Hooper is a Foreign Policy Interrupted Fellow and a David Rockefeller Fellow of the Trilateral Commission. She holds a BA in History from Stanford University and an MA, MPhil, and PhD in political science from Columbia University.

Ryo Sahashi is Professor of International Politics and Director, Center for Asian Studies at Kanagawa University. Dr Sahashi specializes in international politics and is currently focusing on East Asian security as well as Japanese security policy. His recent book is In a Search for Coexistence: The United States and Two Chinas during the Cold War (Tokyo: Keiso, 2015). He recently edited Looking for Leadership: The Dilemma of Political Leadership in Japan (Tokyo and New York: Japan Center for International Exchange, 2015), and wrote 'Japan–Taiwan Relations since 2008: An Evolving, Practical, Non-Strategic Partnership', and 'The Rise of China and the Transformation of Asia-Pacific Security Architecture' (Routledge). Dr Sahashi has been Visiting Associate Professor, Walter H. Shorenstein Asia Pacific Research Center, Stanford University, Shigeru Yoshida Chair, Instituto Tecnológico Autónomo de México (ITAM), and Postdoctoral Fellow, Australian National University. He received his BA from International Christian University and his PhD with Honors from the Graduate Schools for Law and Politics at the University of Tokyo.