

Acknowledgments

Reconstruction and the Arc of Racial (in)Justice grows out of the generous and skilled support of many of our faculty and staff colleagues. First, we are grateful to Dean Sandra Peart for her support for the original idea for this book. Her contributions during the past, exceedingly busy year have been essential to bringing our work to conclusion. University President Emeritus Edward Ayers assisted greatly in helping us shape several elements of the overall project. His willingness to aid in putting together the contributors and other participants was absolutely indispensable, and we are in his debt. Shannon Best was the point person in making many of the initial arrangements. As always, she makes sure that all the moving parts are synchronized and that every detail is looked after. As we moved into the editing phases, Elizabeth DeBusk-Maslanka worked tirelessly and cheerfully to make sure that we, the editors, moved ourselves and the contributors along at a reasonable pace. We thank her for her diligence and patience. We also thank Michele Bedsaul, Pam Khoury and Stephanie Trent for helping everyone involved in producing the final product. We depend greatly on their unwavering willingness to pitch in to assist in whatever way necessary. Two of our faculty colleagues, Ernesto Semán and Thad Williamson, enthusiastically supported the racial (in)justice initiative, and we are grateful. We also thank Alan Sturmer at Edward Elgar for his wisdom, support and interest in this volume and the entire Jepson Studies in Leadership series, as well as the entire Elgar team, including Erin McVicar, Karissa Venne and Hayley Stephenson who worked diligently to bring this project to fruition. Finally, we are grateful to all the contributors for their excellent work.
