Contributors

Asha L. Abeyasekera coordinates the master’s degree programmes in Gender and Women’s Studies and in Counselling and Psychosocial Work at the University of Colombo, Sri Lanka. She holds a PhD in Anthropology and Development Studies from the University of Bath, UK. Her research on marriage and gendered agency has been published in Feminism & Psychology and Feminist Review. Prior to entering academia, she worked for more than ten years as a practitioner and researcher in the development sector in Sri Lanka, focusing mainly on gender-related issues and psychosocial well-being.

Ammar Adenwala is a research assistant with the Minorities in the Southeast Asian Massif Research Lab and a graduate of the Department of Geography, McGill University, Canada. His Masters research focused on the dynamics of urban space production in Cao Bằng, a small city in the Northern uplands of Vietnam. Broadly speaking, he is interested in how residents of Global South cities interface with broad-scale regimes of urban development through their everyday spatial practices, and the new forms of collective identity that emerge as a result of this interfacing.

Ayşe Arslan is a lecturer in the Department of Political Science and Public Administration at Hacettepe University, Turkey. She holds a PhD in Development Studies from the School of Oriental and African Studies. Her research interests focus on class, gender, reproductive labour, informalisation and feminisation of labour, working-class organisation, and Turkey’s political economy.

Cynthia M. Caron is Associate Professor of International Development, Community and Environment (IDCE) at Clark University, USA. Her research focuses on the mutually-constitutive relationship between state and society by especially examining the cultural politics of natural resource access and land tenure and property rights. She has an active research agenda in Puerto Rico, Sri Lanka and Uganda. Her work in Puerto Rico and Sri Lanka centres on resilience building and livelihood development in communities engaged in post-disaster reconstruction. Gender-differentiated knowledge and adoption of new banana cultivars is the focus of her Uganda research with Bioversity International. Recent publications are in the Journal of Extreme Events, Progress in Development Studies and Development in Practice.

Lan-Hung Nora Chiang is Professor Emeritus of Geography, National Taiwan University. Her interests include the Taiwanese–Chinese diaspora, gender and geography, and the regional development of China. Her recent research focuses on Taiwanese migrants to developed countries. She sits on the editorial boards of several journals and has edited many books, monographs and journal theme issues. Between 1988 and 1992, she served on the Steering Committee of the International Geographical Union (IGU) Gender Commission (formerly Study Group on Gender). She was a member of the Editorial Board of Gender, Culture and Place from 2007 to 2011, and has been a member of Society of Women Geographers since 2009.

Anindita Datta is Associate Professor in the Department of Geography, Delhi School of Economics, University of Delhi, India. Her research interests are in the area of feminist geography, conceptual traditions in geography and social geographies of India. She is particularly interested in visibilising indigenous feminisms, re-orienting gender studies to Asian contexts, examining the praxis of everyday life over everyday spaces and in issues of gendered and epistemic violence. Anindita has published consistently in internationally known peer-reviewed journals with an interdisciplinary perspective, has served as member of the international editorial board for Gender, Place & Culture, and been associated with other well-known disciplinary journals. Anindita is also currently a member of the Steering Committee, IGU Commission on Gender and Geography.

Menusha De Silva is a lecturer in the Department of Geography, National University of Singapore. Her main area of expertise is in the intersections of transnational migration and ageing, with a particular focus on Sri Lankan migrants’ later-life mobility and negotiations of transnational citizenship, and eldercare relations within transnational families. Her work also focuses on feminist methodologies and pedagogies. She has published her work in peer-reviewed journals such as Area, Gender, Place & Culture and Population, Space and Place.

Elaine Lynn-Ee Ho is Associate Professor in the Department of Geography and Senior Research Fellow at the Asia Research Institute, National University of Singapore. Her research addresses how citizenship is changing as a result of multi-directional migration flows in the Asia-Pacific. She is author of Citizens in Motion: Emigration, Immigration and Re-migration across China’s Borders (Stanford University Press, 2018), which received the American Sociological Association’s award for Best Book in Global and Transnational Sociology by an International Scholar in 2019. Elaine is editor of the journal Social and Cultural Geography and serves on the journal editorial boards of Citizenship Studies, Emotions, Society and Space and Singapore Journal of Tropical Geography. Her current research focuses on transnational ageing and care in the Asia-Pacific, and im/mobilities and diaspora aid at the China–Myanmar border.

Elsie Seckyee Ho is a member of the New Zealand Order of Merit (MNZM), Honorary Academic of the University of Auckland and Research Associate of the Centre for Research, Evaluation and Social Assessment. She is a leading expert in migration research, and has led numerous projects that have promoted informed debate and fostered greater understanding of Asian immigrant adaptation and settlement issues. Her research on acculturation has included various groups of culturally and linguistically diverse migrants, refugees and international students, with current themes focusing on ageing, mental health and intergenerational care and support for children and elders in transnational families.
Shirlena Huang is Associate Professor in the Geography Department at the National University of Singapore. Her research focuses mainly on issues at the intersection of migration, gender and families, with a particular focus on care labour migration and transnational families within the Asia-Pacific region. More recently, she has looked at eldercare issues and international marriages. She also researches in the area of urbanisation and heritage conservation (particularly in Singapore). She serves on the editorial boards of several journals, including the gender/feminist journals Gender, Place and Culture and Women’s Studies International Forum, as well as the book series Asian Cultural Studies: Transnational and Dialogic Approaches (Rowman & Littlefield) and The Intimate and the Public in Asian and Global Perspectives (Brill).

Hiroki Igarashi is a sociologist and Assistant Professor in the Graduate School of Global and Transdisciplinary Studies at Chiba University, Japan. His research focuses on stratification, education, gender, and cosmopolitanism among mobile affluent Japanese families. He is currently exploring diversifying school choice patterns of Japanese families for children from local schools in Japan to ones in Asia and North America.

Ruri Ito is Professor of Transnational Sociology at Tsuda University, Tokyo. Her areas of interest include gender and migration, citizenship and domestic work. She has worked on the regularisation struggles of undocumented Filipino domestic workers in France. Her recent publications include『ジェンダー研究を継承する』[Inheriting Gender Studies] (co-editor, Jimbun Shoin, 2017) and『家事労働の国際社会学』[Transnational Sociology of Domestic Work: In Quest of Decent Work] (editor, Jimbun Shoin, 2020).

John Knodel is Research Professor Emeritus at the University of Michigan, USA. He conducted collaborative research since 1971 on a wide range of social demographic topics in Southeast Asia, especially in Thailand, Cambodia, Vietnam and most recently Myanmar. During the last two decades his studies focused mainly on issues related to the older-aged population including the AIDS epidemic’s impact on older persons, how migration of adult children affects older-aged parents, intergenerational family support exchanges, and broad assessments of the situation of older persons, including comparative analyses involving Myanmar, Thailand and Vietnam. His research involves both quantitative and qualitative methods.

Kyoko Kusakabe is Professor of Gender and Development Studies, Department of Development and Sustainability, School of Environment, Resources and Development, Asian Institute of Technology, Thailand. Her research focuses on gender and development, labour migration and women in the informal economy. She was a non-governmental organisation (NGO) worker before joining academia and has been conducting research in close collaboration with local NGOs and groups as well as with international organisations. She is one of the authors of Thailand’s Hidden Workforce: Burmese Migrant Women Factory Workers (Zed Books, 2012) and Gender, Mobilities, and Livelihood Transformations: Comparing Indigenous People in China, Laos, and India (Routledge, 2014), Jobs in SEZs: Migrant Garment Factory Workers in the Mekong Region (AIT and Mekong Migration Network, 2019).
Hyunok Lee is an Associate Professor in the Department of Global Public Administration, at Yonsei University, Korea. She received her PhD in the Department of Development Sociology, Cornell University in the USA. Her general research interest lies in exploring the gendered political economic processes in East Asia with a focus on social reproduction. Her current research interests include gendered migration systems in East Asia, citizenship in relation to developmental state and welfare regimes in East Asia, intersections of the migration and care/welfare regimes, Korean developmentalism in the Asian region, and social economy as an alternative development strategy.

Mie Morikawa is Professor of Welfare Sociology at Tsuda University, Tokyo. Her areas of interest include care, gender and ageing policy. She is the author of『介護はいかにして労働となったのか—制度としての承認と評価のメカニズム』[How Care Became ‘Work’: The Mechanism of Recognition and Valuation in the Institutional System] (Minerva Shobo, 2015, Japan Association for Social Policy Studies Award, Japan Welfare Sociology Association Award). She co-edited『東アジアの高齢者ケア』[Long-term Care for the Older Adults in East Asia] (Toshindo, 2018).

Parvati Raghuram is Professor in Geography and Migration at the Open University, UK. She has published widely on re-theorising migration of international students and skilled migrants, particularly women in the information technology (IT) sector and medicine. She is currently leading a grant on contextualising peace education in Nigeria and Zimbabwe which explores the decolonisation of education as a pedagogical challenge in interdisciplinary and intercontinental research. She has written for policy audiences having co-authored research papers for a number of think-tanks. She co-edits the journal South Asian Diaspora with the Centre for Study of Diaspora, Hyderabad, and the Palgrave Pivot series Mobility and Politics.

Smita Ramnarain is Assistant Professor of Economics at the University of Rhode Island (URI), USA. Her research focuses on gender and development issues in South Asia, such as post-conflict reconstruction, peacebuilding and development, feminisation of poverty and female headship, microfinance, environmental adaptation, and resource conflicts. For 2019–21, she is the recipient of the Silvia Chandley Professorship of Peace Studies at URI to reflect her scholarship. She has carried out fieldwork in Nepal and India and published in diverse fora such as Feminist Economics, Gender, Place & Culture and the Community Development Journal, and in edited volumes such as the Handbook of Research Methods in Heterodox Economics (with B. Cronin and F. Lee, Edward Elgar Publishing, 2016).

Kanchana N. Ruwanpura is a Reader in Development Geography at the Institute of Geography, University of Edinburgh, UK. For 2019–20, she was awarded fellowships by the Humboldt Foundation, Max Weber Stifting and France-ILO Chair Fellowship (IAS-Nantes); until recently, she served as a Director for the Center of South Asian Studies (2014–18) and Programme Director of the MSc in Environment and Development at the Institute of Geography (2016–19). Kanchana’s research explores the intersection between feminism, ethnicity, labour and post-war development, on which she has published extensively in numerous peer-reviewed journals, collected editions and authored a monograph published by Michigan University Press. She also serves as an editor of Geoform and Gender, Place and Culture.
Handbook on gender in Asia

Sara Shroff is the Martha LA McCain Postdoctoral Fellow at the Mark S. Bonham Centre for Sexual Diversity Studies at the University of Toronto, Canada. She holds a PhD in Urban and Public Policy from The New School, New York University, USA. As a transnational scholar, her work takes up the mutual constitution and collateral genealogies of race, coloniality, cultural memory, affect, aesthetics and sexuality in contemporary South Asia and its diasporas. Sara’s scholarship cuts across disciplines and includes transnational feminist and queer of colour critique, postcolonial and decolonial economics, and South Asian public and counterpublic formations. Sara has taught in Global Studies, Economics, and Women, Gender and Sexuality studies at The New School, New York University, and PACE University, New York. She previously worked in education policy, global health, philanthropy and social finance for over 18 years.

Bittiandra Chand Somaiah is a Research Fellow in the Asian Migration cluster at the Asia Research Institute, National University of Singapore. She received her PhD in Sociology from Macquarie University, Australia. Her research interests include gendered experiences of migration and carework. Since 2017 she has been involved in the Child Health and Migrant Parents in Southeast Asia (CHAMPSEA) Wave 2 project, which studies the impacts of parental absence on children from sending communities of international labour. She is currently working on a book based on her doctoral dissertation on social reconstructions of im/migrant mothering among Kodavathe transnationals living in the Asia-Pacific.

Gunjan Sondhi is a Lecturer in Geography at the Open University, UK. Gunjan’s work employs a gender lens to examine the experiences of highly skilled migrants and international students.

Paul Statham is Professor of Migration and Director of the Sussex Centre for Migration Research at the University of Sussex, UK. He is Editor-in-Chief of the Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies. Paul has written monographs, edited volumes, and authored more than 70 articles in refereed journals and edited volumes – a research programme supported by large grant awards. Paul is a political sociologist committed to interdisciplinary approaches. His current research is on transnational living that results from migration, mobility and cross-border exchanges between Europe and Southeast Asia. In 2015, he established the Sussex-Mahidol Migration Partnership to build capacity in migration-related research.

Wai-man Tang received his PhD in anthropology from The Chinese University of Hong Kong in 2013. His doctoral thesis is on the relationships between heroin use and transnational migration among the second and third generations of Nepalis in Hong Kong. His research interests include drugs, migration, sports and South Asian cultures. He is currently researching a South Asian sport, kabaddi, with the focus on two aspects: its cultural politics during the worlding process and its educative value when it is developed as a tool for intercultural education in Hong Kong.

Bussarawan Teerawichitchainan holds joint appointments as Associate Professor in the Department of Sociology and Co-Director of the Centre for Family and Population Research at the National University of Singapore. Her research interests lie at the intersection of family demography, social gerontology, population health, social stratification and Southeast Asia. Her current research examines the roles of family, policy and social structure in explaining the well-being of older persons in Southeast Asia. This includes an ongoing study funded by the National Institutes of Health on the long-term impacts of war and trauma exposure on the health and well-being of older Vietnamese survivors in Vietnam.

Maddy Thompson examines global care mobilities, including forms of digital health and the movements of health care workers. Her research interests lie at the intersection of debates on care, migration and work. Maddy’s research is focused on the Philippines as a central hub of the global care network, and of nurses and care workers as central actors. She also conducts pedagogic research into student voice. Maddy received her PhD in Human Geography from Newcastle University, UK in 2019 and will be starting a Leverhulme Early Career Fellowship at Keele University, UK in 2020.

Sarah Turner is a Professor in the Department of Geography, McGill University, Canada. Her research focuses on the ways by which individuals who find themselves somehow marginalised, be it economically, politically, or ethnically, make a living in urban and rural Asia. Her current projects include a focus on the informal economy livelihoods and resistance tactics of street vendors and motorbike taxi drivers in Hanoi, Vietnam. She also focuses on ethnic minority livelihoods in the Sino-Vietnamese borderlands, and co-authored Frontier Livelihoods: Hmong in the Sino-Vietnamese Borderlands with C. Bonnin and J. Michaud (University of Washington Press, 2015).

Lauren Wilks is currently an Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) Postdoctoral Fellow in the School of Social and Political Science at the University of Edinburgh. She is a feminist ethnographer and interdisciplinary social researcher with interests in work/labour, gender, mobility and inequality. She has a background in history and sociology, and received her PhD in sociology from the University of Edinburgh, UK in 2019.

Yi Yang is a sociologist studying ageing and health, with special attention to cognitive impairment. Her work focuses on various social, familial, and health factors concerning the elderly such as social exclusion, poverty, social isolation, long-term care, lifestyle, and mental health. Through a combination of quantitative and qualitative research approaches, she also seeks to better understand and analyse the impact of social transitions on the growing ageing population in Asian societies like Singapore, China and Japan.
Sallie Yea is a human geographer in the Department of Social Inquiry, La Trobe University. Her work focuses on migration and marginality, particularly within Asia. Her work has centred particularly on human trafficking and labour exploitation in the migration process and she has conducted studies on this topic for migrant workers in a range of sectors from the Philippines, Cambodia, Bangladesh, India and Vietnam. She is currently working on projects that examine the issues of ‘seafood slavery’ and precarious migrant workers and justice respectively. She has published widely in journals and has two monographs, Trafficking Women in Korea (2015) and Human Trafficking and the Anti-Trafficking Movement in Singapore (2019), both published by Routledge.

Celia Zuberec is an Honours student in the Department of Geography, McGill University, Canada. Her Honours research focused on youth itinerant street vendors in Hanoi, Vietnam, and highlighted the importance of mobility for navigating the city’s street vending ban, accessing regular customers and securing a livelihood. Most recently she completed fieldwork in Hanoi for a project relating to the emergence, disappearance and impact of creative hubs. Celia has interests in informal livelihoods, public space, sustainable development and the creative economy.