

Contributors

Jens Bartelson is Professor in Political Science. He received his doctorate from the University of Stockholm in 1993. His fields of interest include international political theory, the history of political thought, political philosophy and social theory. Jens Bartelson has written mainly about the concept of the sovereign state and the philosophy of world community. His work has appeared in journals such as International Studies Quarterly, Political Theory, Review of International Studies, European Journal of International Relations, European Journal of International Law and International Political Sociology.

Annika Björkdahl is Professor of Political Science and Editor in Chief of Cooperation and Conflict. Her research includes international and local peace building with a particular focus on urban peace building, and gender and transitional justice. She has published articles in journal such as Millennium, Peace and Change, Human Rights Review, Journal of European Public Policy, International Peacekeeping, Security Dialogue. She is a leading expert on peace and conflict, small states and the role of ideas and norms in international relations.

Charles Butcher is Associate Professor of Political Science in the Department of Sociology and Political Science at the Norwegian University of Science and Technology. His research focuses on the onset and outcomes of violent and non-violent resistance movements and historical state systems. His work has been published in Journal of Peace Research, Journal of Conflict Resolution, International Studies Quarterly, International Interactions, Comparative Political Studies, Review of International Studies and Third World Quarterly.

Agustín Goenaga is a Research Fellow at the Department of Political Science, Lund University, and the Swedish Royal Academy of Letters, History and Antiquities. He has a Ph.D from the University of British Columbia (UBC), which was funded by a Vanier Canada Graduate Scholarship. His main research interests are in comparative political economy comparative political development, democratic theory and mixed-method research designs.

Ryan Griffiths is Senior Lecturer in the Department of Government and International Relations at the University of Sydney. His research focuses on secession, sovereignty and the comparative analysis of international systems. He is the author of Age of Secession: The International and Domestic Determinants of State Birth (Cambridge University Press, 2016).

Janis Grzybowski is Assistant Professor at the European School of Political and Social Sciences at the Catholic University of Lille, and Associate Researcher at the Erik-Castrén Institute of International Law and Human Rights at the University of Helsinki. His main research interest concerns state creation and the mutation of the international between international politics and law. His latest publications include articles in the European Journal of International Law and Journal of International Political Theory.

Alexander von Hagen-Jamar is a Researcher with the STANCE project at the Department of Political Science, Lund University. He has a Ph.D from the University of Michigan. His main research interests include international security, elites and foreign policy, arming and alliances, and war and political development. His published work can be found in the Journal of Politics.

Martin Hall is Associate Professor in Political Science at Lund University. He is co-editor of Cooperation and Conflict, and is specialized in the historical sociology of international relations, with several key contributions published in edited volumes and international journals. His main research interests are civilizational analysis; international relations and historical sociology; and international political thought and conceptual history. In addition to STANCE, he conducts research on the politics of World Heritage and Barbarian Diplomacy.

Jonathan K. Hanson is Lecturer at the Gerald R. Ford School of Public Policy at the University of Michigan. His research includes projects on economic growth and human development, state capacity, authoritarian politics, economic inequality and the effects of social heterogeneity. He is the author of 'Forging then taming Leviathan: state capacity, constraints on rulers, and development,' International Studies Quarterly (2014) and with Mary Gallagher of 'Power tool or dull blade? Selectorate theory for autocracies,' Annual Review of Political Science (2015).

Arthur Learoyd has recently completed a D.Phil in International Relations at the University of Oxford, focusing on the 'semi-sovereign' polities of the long nineteenth century. He is interested in international relations theory – especially debates around 'relationism,' hierarchy and unit variation, as well as historical-sociological approaches to the subject – and aspects of modern international, global and imperial history.

Ellen Ravndal is a research fellow in the Department of International Relations, Coral Bell School of Asia Pacific Affairs, the Australian National University, and an affiliated researcher on the STANCE project. From 2015 to 2017 she was a post-doctoral researcher in the Department of Political Science, Lund University. Ellen holds a D.Phil from St Antony's College, University of Oxford. Her research focuses on the history of international organizations and how their representatives gain autonomy.

Ted Svensson is Associate Professor at the Department of Political Science, Lund University, Sweden. He holds a Ph.D in Politics and International Studies from the University of Warwick, United Kingdom. His publications include Production of Postcolonial India and Pakistan: Meanings of Partition (Routledge, 2013) and articles in Postcolonial Studies, Third World Quarterly, Global Society and Alternatives. He is also editor of the journal Cooperation and Conflict.

Jan Teorell is Professor of Political Science and project leader of STANCE, and received his Ph.D in 1998 from Uppsala University. He is the author of Determinants of Democratization (Cambridge University Press, 2010), and his published work has appeared in journals such as: American Political Science Review, European Journal of Political Research, Journal of Democracy, Political Research Quarterly and Studies in Comparative International Development. His research interests include political methodology and comparative politics, comparative democratization, corruption and state making.