

---

Contributors

---

Susan Achury is a PhD candidate in Political Science at the University of Houston. Her research focuses on comparative political institutions, with a focus on Latin American politics and judicial institutions under different political contexts. She is a lawyer from Colombia and earned an MA in political science from UTEP.

Ryan C. Black is Professor of Political Science at Michigan State University. His research focuses on US Supreme Court decision making. His published work includes three university press books and 50 articles/chapters. He is also way into LEGO.

Jennifer Bowie is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Richmond and Editor of the Law and Politics Book Review. She has published researched in several peer-reviewed journals, including Journal of Politics, Political Research Quarterly, Justice System Journal, and Journal of Law and Courts.

Patrícia Branco is a researcher at Centro de Estudos Sociais in Portugal, working on the project Courts, Communities and Citizens: The Effectiveness in (Territorial, Spatial and Symbolic) Access to Justice of the New Reform of the Judiciary (FCT/POCH, Ref. SFRH/BPD/102236/2014). Research interests include access to justice, courthouse architecture and geographies of justice, law and the humanities.

Elizabeth Chron is a Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council Postdoctoral Fellow at the Department of Political Science at McGill University. She holds a PhD in political science from the University of Washington. Her research has appeared in Business & Politics and Annual Review of Resources and the Environment.

Rachel Cichowski is Professor in the Department of Political Science and the Law, Societies and Justice Department at the University of Washington. Her research interests include international courts, legal mobilization and human rights. Her research is supported by the NSF and is published by Cambridge University Press and various journals.

Paul M. Collins, Jr is Professor of Political Science and Director of Legal Studies at the University of Massachusetts Amherst. His research focuses on understanding the democratic nature of the judiciary, interdisciplinary approaches to legal decision making and social movement litigation.

Audrey L. Comstock holds a PhD in Government from Cornell University and is Assistant Professor of Political Science and Human Rights at the School of Social and Behavioral Sciences at Arizona State University. Her research interests are international law, human rights and domestic institutions as they influence international affairs.

Lisa Conant is Professor and Chair of Political Science at the University of Denver and author of the book Justice Contained: Law and Politics in the European Union. Her recent research explores human rights practices in Europe and legal mobilization before the European Court of Human Rights.

Todd A. Curry, PhD, is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Texas at El Paso. His research examines the intersection of judicial politics and political communications, appearing in The Journal of Politics, Justice System Journal and PS: Political Science & Politics. Language and the Law: State Supreme Courts and Judicial Opinions is available through Routledge.

Luciano Da Ros is Assistant Professor of Political Science and Public Policy at Federal University of Rio Grande do Sul, UFRGS. He also works as a researcher at the Center for International Government Studies (CEGOV) and the Comparative Political Institutions Research Group (IpoC). His research areas include analysing institutions of the justice system.

J. Jarpa Dawuni is currently Assistant Professor of Political Science at Howard University. Her research examines women in the legal professions across Africa. Her two recent books are International Courts and the African Woman Judge: Unveiled Narratives (Routledge, 2018), with Judge Akua Kuenyehia, and Gender and the Judiciary in Africa: From Obscurity to Parity? (Routledge, 2016), with Gretchen Bauer.

Anthony C. Diala is Senior Lecturer in the Department of Private Law at the University of the Western Cape in South Africa. He joined UWC in 2018 from the University of Cape Town, where he was a University Research Committee Fellow in the Centre for Comparative Law in Africa. He has taught African law, human rights, and international law in South Africa and in Nigeria. He has written on customary law, family law, legal pluralism and constitutionalism, and received research support from multiple granting agencies in Africa, Europe and North America.

Tao L. Dumas is an assistant professor of political science at The College of New Jersey. Dr Dumas received her PhD from Louisiana State University. She studies judicial politics with an emphasis on US state trial and appellate courts and the role of lawyers in the legal system.

Maria C. Escobar-Lemmon is Professor of Political Science at Texas A&M University. Her current coauthored research, funded by the National Science Foundation, focuses on gender equality and the judiciary around the world. She has published on women in cabinets, including Women in Presidential Cabinets: Power Players or Abundant Tokens (Oxford University Press).

Andrew Eslich (BA, Vassar College) is currently a student at the University of Cambridge, studying politics and literature.

Chris Hilson is Professor of Law at the School of Law, University of Reading, UK. He has published widely on legal mobilization, with a focus in recent years on climate change litigation. His research draws particular inspiration from the literature on social movements: in addition to creating legal opportunity structure as a theory, he has a particular interest in framing.

Valerie Hoekstra is Associate Professor in the School of Politics and Global Studies at Arizona State University. Her current coauthored, NSF funded research examines gender equality and the judiciary. Her prior work examined judicial politics and decision making in the US Supreme Court and includes Public Reactions to Supreme Court Decisions (Cambridge University Press).

Andreas Hofmann is a postdoctoral researcher at Freie Universität Berlin. His research centres mostly on legal mobilization before European courts. He has held previous positions as a lecturer at the University of Cologne and postdoctoral Fellow at the Centre for European Research (CERGU), University of Gothenburg.

Matthew C. Ingram is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University at Albany, State University of New York. His research examines justice sector reforms, judicial behaviour and violence in Latin America. Ingram's academic work has appeared in several peer reviewed journals and edited volumes. His book Crafting Courts in New Democracies: The Politics of Subnational Judicial Reform in Brazil and Mexico was published in 2016 by Cambridge University Press.

Gbemende Johnson is currently Assistant Professor of Government at Hamilton College. Her research interests are American institutions, judicial politics and executive branch politics. Her work has appeared in outlets such as American Journal of Political Science, Vanderbilt Law Review and State Politics & Policy Quarterly. She received her doctorate in political science from Vanderbilt University.

Alice J. Kang is Associate Professor in the Department of Political Science and the Institute for Ethnic Studies at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. Her current co-authored, NSF funded research examines gender equality and the judiciary. Her prior work on women's activism and representation in Africa includes Bargaining for Women's Rights (University of Minnesota Press).

Benjamin J. Kassow is Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science and Public Administration at the University of North Dakota. His research examines how opinions are crafted by judges on appellate courts, as well as how court opinions translate into policy by lower courts and other political actors.

Miki Caul Kittilson is Professor of Political Science in the School of Politics and Global Studies at Arizona State University. Her current coauthored research, funded by the National Science Foundation, focuses on gender equality and the judiciary. She has also published on comparative political behavior and political parties, including The Gendered Effects of Electoral Institutions (Oxford University Press).

Sarah Esther Lageson is Assistant Professor at the Rutgers University-Newark School of Criminal Justice. Her research interests include public access to criminal justice data, error in criminal record databases and associated issues involving punishment, constitutional rights and inequality.

Tabeth Masengu is currently Senior Researcher at the Democratic Governance and Rights Unit based at the University of Cape Town (UCT) and has published widely on gender and judging and women's rights. She is also a joint PhD candidate at UCT and the Human Rights Centre at Ghent University.

Taneisha N. Means (PhD, Duke University) is Assistant Professor on the class of 1951 chair in the department of political science at Vassar College. Her research interests include racial and ethnic politics, judicial politics, and media and politics.

James Meernik is Regents Professor of Political Science and Director of the Castleberry Peace Institute at the University of North Texas. He specializes in research on international justice and international courts, and postconflict peace building. Professor Meernik focuses currently on the peace process and transitional justice in Colombia.

Kelley Moulton is Director of the Centre for Law and Society and Senior Lecturer in the Department of Public Law in the Faculty of Law at the University of Cape Town. Her research focuses on multisited implementation of laws concerning violence against women: she has studied health care providers as well as the multiple actors in the criminal justice system. She is the principal investigator for a project on child marriage in southern Africa. She has published on sexual and reproductive health and on courts, crime and domestic violence. She has been a Fulbright Fellow at George Washington University, and a Kerwin Fellow and National Institute of Justice Fellow at American University. She is also the editor of South Africa Crime Quarterly.

David Moya is Associate Professor of Political Science, Constitutional Law and Philosophy of Law at the University of Barcelona. He has participated in expert groups counselling the Ministry of Labour in Spain, the Catalan Secretariat of Migration or the Local Education Council of Barcelona. He is the external counsellor at CCAR-CEAR and external adviser for JRS-Europe, both NGOs working with refugees and forced migrants.

Laura P. Moyer is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Louisville. Her research focuses on judicial decision making in appellate courts, especially the influence of gender and race. She is coauthor of Diversity Matters: Judicial Policy Making in the U.S. Courts of Appeals (UVA Press, 2015).

Luz Muñoz is Professor of Political Science at the University of Barcelona. Her research interests include analysing the participation of stakeholders in Spain in the government and parliamentary arena.

Kati Nieminen (MA, LLD) is a postdoctoral researcher at the Institute of Criminology and Legal Policy at the University of Helsinki, Finland. Her research covers areas such as legal policy and access to justice.

Jonathan Parent is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Le Moyne College in Syracuse, NY. He received his PhD from the University at Albany, SUNY in 2014. Parent is the author of Reproductive Rights in New York and New Jersey: Abortion, the Empire, and the Garden.

Andelka M. Phillips has recently defended her doctoral thesis for the degree of doctor of philosophy in law (DPhil, equivalent to PhD) in the Faculty of Law at the University of Oxford. Her current research is concerned with the appropriate regulation of direct to consumer genetic testing (DTC). Her doctoral research considered the regulation of DTC and included a review of the wrap contracts (clickwrap and browsewrap) of DTC companies that provide testing for health purposes. Future work will examine the contracts and privacy policies of DTC companies offering non-health related testing. Andelka was resident at the Brocher Foundation in August and September 2016.

Aldo F. Ponce is Associate Professor at the Department of Political Studies of the Centre for Research and Teaching in Economics (CIDE) in Mexico City. He has published in a range of journals, including Studies in Comparative International Development, Party Politics and Latin American Research Review, among others.

Kaitlin Prado is an undergraduate student at Vassar College, double majoring in political science and drama.

Rebecca A. Reid, PhD, is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Texas at El Paso. Her research focuses on judicial politics and international law, appearing in Political Research Quarterly, the Justice System Journal, Journal of Law and Courts and PS: Political Science & Politics.

Lori A. Ringhand is J. Alton Hosch Professor of Law at the University of Georgia School of Law. Ringhand teaches constitutional law, comparative constitutional law and election law. Her research focuses on the US Supreme Court, democratic decision making and comparative election law.

Julio Ríos-Figueroa is Professor of Political Science at CIDE in Mexico City. He received his PhD in Politics from New York University (NYU). He is the author of four books as well as coeditor, with Gretchen Helmke, of the volume Courts in Latin America, published by Cambridge University Press. Professor Ríos-Figueroa has been a Hauser Research Scholar at the NYU School of Law, Visiting Professor at the Juan March Institute in Madrid, O’Gorman Fellow at Columbia University and 2017–18 Andrew W. Mellon Fellow at Stanford’s CASBS.

Peter Robson is a solicitor and sits as a judge in Her Majesty’s Courts and Tribunals Service, and is Professor of Social Welfare Law at the University of Strathclyde. His publications include Film and the Law (2010), A Transnational Study of Law and Justice on TV (2016), Gender, Ethnicity and Diversity (2018) and Residential Tenancies (2019).

Johnny Rodger is Professor of Urban Literature at the Glasgow School of Art. He has published several works of fiction and critical works. His research interests include understanding how spaces are inhabited by society by using literary analysis along with the critical political and social sciences techniques.

Elisha Carol Savchak is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Elon University, in Elon, NC. She received her PhD in political science from the University of South Carolina in 2009, and also holds a BA in political science from the University of North Carolina – Greensboro. She specializes in American judicial politics, and her research interests include judicial decision making and influence within the judiciary, judicial careers and political institutions.

Jessica A. Schoenherr is a PhD candidate in political science at Michigan State University. Her research examines how Supreme Court merits briefs influence judicial decision making. She is an avid hockey fan.

Susanne Schorpp is Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science at Georgia State University. Her research explores the conditions that impact the willingness and ability of courts to protect individual rights. She has published in peer reviewed outlets including The Journal of Politics and the Justice System Journal.

Ulrike Schultz is a lawyer and retired Senior Academic at the Fern Universität in Hagen, Germany. She specializes in questions of gender and law, the sociology of the legal profession and didactics and professional communication. She has taken part in many international sociolegal projects and conducted large empirical studies on subjects such as Women's Careers in the Judiciary and Women in the Legal Academy. She heads the Working Group on Women/Gender in the Legal Professions, has been a member of the Oñati International Institute for the Sociology of Law Governing Board since 2006 and is President of the Research Committee for the Sociology of Law (RCSL).

Dagmar Soennecken is Associate Professor in the School of Public Policy & Administration at York University. She is also crossappointed to the Law & Society Program (housed in the Department of Social Science). Her research focuses on comparative politics and public policy in the EU and North America. She is particularly interested in questions concerning law and the courts, as well as citizenship and migration.

Susan M. Sterett is Director of the School of Public Policy at University of Maryland, Baltimore County. She has most recently published in American Behavioral Scientist and Politics and Gender. She has also organized workshops at the International Institute for the Sociology of Law on climate change and disaster. Between 2016 and 2019, she served as coeditor of Law and Society Review.

Mayur Suresh is Lecturer in the School of Law, SOAS, University of London. He is currently completing a manuscript entitled Terrorists on Trial: Life and Law in Delhi's Courts, an ethnography of terrorism trials in Delhi, India.

Lydia Brashear Tiede is currently Associate Professor in Political Science at the University of Houston. Her interests include constitutional courts and legal reform in Latin America and Eastern Europe. She conducts research on the rule of law and judicial independence in developing nations. Her work has been published by International Studies Quarterly, World Development and Journal of Empirical Legal Studies.

Lisa Vanhala is Professor of Political Science at University College London. Her research focuses on legal mobilization and legal norms. She has recently published in Comparative Political Studies, Global Environmental Politics and Journal of Law & Courts.

Lee Demetrius Walker is Associate Professor and Associate Chair of the Department of Political Science at the University of North Texas. His research focuses on comparative judicial politics, Latin American politics and comparative democratization. He has published in Journal of Politics, Comparative Politics, Law and Society Review and Latin American Research Review.

Justin Wedeking is Professor of Political Science at the University of Kentucky. His research examines judicial behavior, oral arguments and Supreme Court confirmation hearings. He has coauthored three books and numerous articles, and his research has been discussed in many media outlets.

