Contributors

Wieger Bakker is Professor at the Faculty of Law, Economics and Governance (LEG) of Utrecht University. For the faculty he is assigned to work on the quality and innovation of society-oriented higher education. Trained as a sociologist, he has been working in the field of public administration and public policy making. Since 2010 he has been director of the bachelor programme of the Utrecht University School of Governance within the LEG faculty. Central themes in his lecturing and research are: the tension between rationality and power in public policy formation and implementation; the role of governmental policy making for the shape and change of public (welfare) institutions; and the way in which public responsibilities are organized and executed within public institutions. He is especially interested in European citizenship, international development cooperation and the development of (higher) education.

Tom Binder studied European law at Utrecht University, where he graduated with honours (2016) and is now employed as student-assistant at the Europe Institute. He is currently pursuing a degree in public international law at Utrecht University, while being employed as junior lecturer for the European law section at the Faculty of Law, Economics and Governance. In the course of his studies, Tom has co-authored multiple publications on various topics related to European law. His primary research interests cover European Union competition law and citizenship.

Francis Cheneval holds the chair of political philosophy at the University of Zurich. He has written two books on the history of cosmopolitanism and papers in the field of democratic theory, property rights theory, human rights and on various topics of the history of political thought. One of his more important publications is The Government of the Peoples: On the Idea and Principles of Multilateral Democracy (2011).

Robert Csehi has been Lecturer and Post-Doc Researcher at the Chair of European and Global Governance at the Bavarian School of Public Policy, Munich since January 2018. His area of interest involves comparative and European politics. More specifically, he studies comparative federalism, European integration theory, European economic governance, trade policy and democratic developments of the European Union. His previous research involvements include the FP7 bEUcitizen and the H2020 EMU Choices projects, which both analysed different aspects of the euro crisis. He received his PhD from the Central European University (CEU) and holds an MA in international relations and economics from Corvinus University, Budapest. He worked as a visiting professor at CEU’s School of Public Policy and as a researcher at CEU’s Center for European Union Research from 2014 to 2017. His latest work appeared in the Journal of European Public Policy.
Contributors

Oliver Eberl is a senior researcher at Goethe-University Frankfurt. His research expertise lies in normative political theory, democratic theory, transnationalization of democracy and the history of ideas. He is co-editor (with Sandra Seubert and Frans van Waarden) of the book Reconsidering EU Citizenship in this bEUcitizen series by Edward Elgar.

Mónica Ferrín is a researcher at Collegio Carlo Alberto, Turin. Her main areas of interest are public opinion and survey methodology, citizenship studies and democracy.

Rutger Fransen holds an MA in the history of international relations and is currently enrolled as a student in the Legal Research Master’s programme at Utrecht University. His research focus consists of exploring legal theoretical and ‘non-legal’ approaches to the study of European and international law. He previously worked as a research assistant at Utrecht University and as an intern to the Dutch Permanent Mission to the United Nations in Geneva.

Daniel Gaus was a senior researcher in the bEUcitizen project from 2014 to 2016 at Goethe University Frankfurt. His research expertise lies in democratic theory, deliberative theory, European Union integration and epistemology of democracy. He is now working at Johannes Gutenberg-Universität Mainz.

Anna Gerbrandy is Professor of Competition Law at the Europa Institute of the School of Law, University of Utrecht. She is a visiting professor at Cha Foscara University and at the European University Institute in Fiesole. Anna is a member of the research group Renforce and co-leader of the sustainability pillar of the university’s research focus on Institutions for an Open Society. After graduating, Anna worked as a European law advocate at one of the leading law firms of the Netherlands and as a senior law clerk for the competition law chamber of the district court of Rotterdam before returning to academia. In 2009 she defended her cum laude work on Convergence in Competition Law. Anna’s current research focus lies on the interplay between competition law and public interests.
Democratic empowerment in the European Union and more generally on the theoretical foundations of both competition law and public economic law in the changing societal European context. Her institutional responsibilities cover both research and education. Furthermore, Anna holds several positions of trust, both within the university and in societal organizations. She has extensive lecturing experience in both the Netherlands and abroad, and is honorary judge at the High Court of Tariffs and Trade for appellate competition law cases.

Hanan Haber is a fellow in public policy and administration in the Government Department and in the Centre for Analysis of Risk and Regulation at the London School of Economics and Political Science. He wrote his PhD at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem on the use of regulation for social purposes, focusing on policy addressing inequality in access to basic services over time and in different national and sector contexts. His research interests include comparative public policy, regulation and social policy, and the relation between economic efficiency and social equity.

Marco Inglese is currently a postdoctoral researcher at the School of Politics and International Relations, University College Dublin. He holds a joint PhD in European and public law (University of Bologna and University of Strasbourg, 2014), an MA in international law (2010) and a JD (University of Bologna, 2009). He also carried out postdoctoral researches at the Faculty of Law, University of Sarajevo (2016). Marco has been assistant professor of international and European law at the China-Europe School of Law, China University of Political Science and Law, Beijing, 2015 and 2016, where he was also a junior lecturer. Marco interned at the Secretariat General of the European Commission (2014) and at the TMC Asser Instituut, The Hague (2010). He was visiting researcher at the University of Strasbourg in 2012 and 2013. Marco’s research interests cover European Union institutional law, internal market, health law and public international law.

Petr Kaniok completed his doctoral studies programme in political science at the Faculty of Social Studies, Masaryk University (2006). He is currently Associate Professor at the Department of International Relations and European Studies. He also serves as Senior Research Fellow at the International Institute for Political Science in the faculty. His long-term research focus are on Euroscepticism, European Union institutions, the political system of the European Union and political systems in Scandinavian countries. Since 2012, he has served as editor-in-chief of the Czech Journal of Political Science.

Viktor Koska holds an MSc degree in forced migration from the Refugee Studies Centre, University of Oxford, where he graduated with the thesis.
Reality of Return and Reintegration of Minority Refugees: Serbian Returnees in Croatia. As part of his postgraduate studies, Viktor applied extensive field research on the minority refugees issues in Croatia. He studied at the University of Washington, Seattle and earned his BA degree in political science from the Faculty of Political Sciences, University of Zagreb. He worked as an intern at the Coalition for International Criminal Court, as a junior expert associate at the Agency for Adult Education (Zagreb, Croatia) and in a number of civil society projects in Croatia. His research interests are in forced migration, minority studies and education policy. Currently he is a teaching and research assistant and PhD student at the Faculty of Political Sciences, University of Zagreb.

Nir Kosti is a PhD candidate in the political science department at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. His research focuses on forms and processes of legalization across countries and sectors. In particular, he studies the co-production and co-evolution of laws and regulations in several democratic countries.

Daniel Kübler is Associate Professor at the Department of Political Science, and Director of the Centre for Democracy Studies at the University of Zurich. He graduated from the University of Lausanne (MA, 1993; PhD, 1998) and obtained his venia legendi in political science from the University of Zurich (2004). His current research interests are democracy and multi-level governance, public policy and representative bureaucracy. Before his current appointment, he was a professor at the Institute of Social Planning and Urban Development of the University of Applied Sciences in Basel. He has held visiting scholarships at the University of Montpellier, the University of Constance and the University of New South Wales.

Fernando Mendez is a senior researcher at the Centre for Research on Direct Democracy at the Zentrum für Demokratie Aarau, University of Zurich. He is also the coordinator of the Preference Matcher research consortium. He gained his MSc in European politics from the London School of Economics and holds a PhD in political science from the European University Institute, Florence. He has been a visiting scholar at the University of California, Berkeley and the Cyprus University of Technology. His academic interests include direct democracy, comparative federalism, European integration, comparative public policy and internet politics.

Guy Mor is a graduate student in the political science department at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, where he previously studied philosophy and political science and graduated with honours. His primary research interests are political representation, state theory, populism and the ethics of democratic participation.

Uwe Puetter is Professor of European Public Policy and Governance at the School of Public Policy of the Central European University, Budapest. He is also Director of the university’s Center for European Union Research. He is the author and editor of a series of publications focusing on institutional change in contemporary European Union decision making. Among them are The European Council and the Council (2014) and The New Intergovernmentalism (2015).

Sandra Seubert is Professor of Political Theory at Goethe-University Frankfurt. Her research expertise lies in modern political theory, democratic representation, transnationalization of democracy and political theory of privacy. She is co-editor of the books Reconsidering EU Citizenship (with Oliver Eberl and Frans van Waarden) and Moving Beyond Barriers (with Marcel Hoogenboom, Trudie Knijn, Sybe de Vries and Frans van Waarden) in this bEUcitizen series by Edward Elgar Publishing.

Christoph Struenck is Full Professor of political science and member of the Institute of Advanced Studies at the University of Siegen, Germany. He is also Director of the Institute of Gerontology at Technical University Dortmund. He taught at Radboud Universiteit Nijmegen, the Netherlands, and was a visiting scholar at the University of California, Berkeley. His main areas of interest are public policy and political economy, especially social policy and consumer policy, interest group politics, local politics and third-sector organizations, as well as law and politics.

Marlot van der Kolk graduated in 2015 with honours from the Master’s programme of the Utrecht University School of Governance where she worked on differences between EU Member States in young generations’ access to the labour market. Since 2016 she has combined research on EU citizenship with lecturing in the area of public administration and political science. In 2017 she started working as a policy advisor in regional public service provision in the field of youth and education.

Keren Winter-Dinur is a graduate student at the Department of Political Science at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, where she graduated with honours (2017). Keren is currently pursuing a PhD in political science.

Roman Zwicky is a research assistant at the Centre for Democracy Studies Aarau and at the Department of Political Science, University of Zurich. He studied political science, Islamic studies and the theory and history of photography at the University of Zurich and graduated with a master’s degree in social sciences. He has predominantly been working in interdisciplenary projects investigating the representation of linguistic groups in the multilingual Swiss federal administration. Apart from that, his research interests include democratization, comparative local democracy and direct democracy.
Contributors