
Contributors

Catherine Baker is Senior Lecturer in 20th Century History at the University of Hull and researches the everyday politics of conflict and post-conflict settings, especially the post-Yugoslav region. Her research on the micropolitics of translation and interpreting in peacekeeping and peacebuilding in Bosnia-Herzegovina has been published in International Peacekeeping, Slavic Review, War and Society and elsewhere, and she is the co-author of Interpreting the Peace: Peace Operations, Conflict and Language in Bosnia-Herzegovina (Palgrave Macmillan, 2013). Her interest in transitional justice stems from her wider research on narratives of the Yugoslav wars in popular culture and everyday life, published in Sounds of the Borderland: Popular Music, War and Nationalism in Croatia since 1991 (Ashgate, 2010), The Yugoslav Wars of the 1990s (Palgrave Macmillan, 2015) and elsewhere. Her most recent book is Race and the Yugoslav Region: Postsocialist, Post-Conflict, Postcolonial? (Manchester University Press, 2018).

Pol Bargaés-Pedreny is a Research Fellow at the Barcelona Centre for International Affairs (CIDOB), working on the Horizon 2020 project on EU's external action (EULISTCO). He has developed an interest in the intersection of philosophy and international relations. His work explores debates of international interventions and critically interrogates perspectives on resilience, hybridity and social critique. He is the author of Deferring Peace in International Statebuilding: Difference, Resilience and Critique (Routledge, 2018) and co-editor of Mapping and Politics in the Digital Age (Routledge, 2018).

Annika Björkdahl is Professor of Political Science at Lund University, Sweden. She has published widely on spatial perspectives on peace and conflict, peacebuilding and transitional justice as well as gender. Among her recent publications are Peacebuilding and Spatial Transformation: Peace, Space and Place (Routledge, 2017) co-authored with Stefanie Kappler, and Spatialising Peace and Conflict: Mapping the Production of Places, Sites and Scales of Violence (Palgrave MacMillan, 2016) co-edited with Susanne Buckley-Zistel. She is the Editor in Chief of Cooperation and Conflict.

Berit Bliesemann de Guevara is a Reader at Aberystwyth University's Department of International Politics, UK, and Founding Director of the Centre for the International Politics of Knowledge. Her current research explores processes of policy-relevant knowledge production and dissemination, especially with regard to violent conflict and peacebuilding interventions, as well as the use of arts-based methods in peace and conflict studies. Previously, she has worked extensively on international statebuilding and on myths in international politics. Berit is co-editor (with R. Kostić) of Knowledge and Expertise in International Interventions: The Politics of Facts, Truth and Authenticity (Routledge, 2018) and editor of Myth and Narrative in International Politics (Palgrave Macmillan, 2016) and a special issue on the International Crisis Group (Third World Quarterly, 2014).

Volker Boege is Senior Research Fellow at the Toda Peace Institute, Tokyo, Japan; Honorary Research Fellow at the School of Political Science and International Studies, University of Queensland (UQ), Brisbane, Australia; and Co-Director of Peace & Conflict Studies Institute Australia (PaCSIA). Over the last few years, Volker has worked on research projects which address peacebuilding and state formation in Pacific Island Countries and West Africa. From the 1980s through to the early 2000s, Volker worked with a number of peace research institutions in Germany and Switzerland (Institute for Peace Research and Security Policy at the University of Hamburg, Unit for the Study of Wars, Armaments and Development of the University of Hamburg, Swiss Peace Foundation, Bern, INEF, Bonn International Centre for Conversion). He moved to Australia and started work with UQ in 2005. In 2012, he was a co-founder of PaCSIA. Volker has published numerous journal articles, book chapters, reports, conference papers and books in peace research and contemporary history.

David Chandler is Professor of International Relations at the University of Westminster and editor of the journal Resilience: International Policies, Practices and Discourses. His most recent monographs are Ontopolitics in the Anthropocene: An Introduction to Mapping, Sensing and Hacking (Routledge, 2018); Peacebuilding: The Twenty Years' Crisis: 1997–2017 (Palgrave Macmillan, 2017); The Neoliberal Subject: Resilience, Adaptation and Vulnerability (with Julian Reid; Rowman & Littlefield, 2016); and Resilience: The Governance of Complexity (Routledge, 2014).

Yasmin Chilmeran is a doctoral candidate at Monash University's Centre for Gender, Peace and Security. Her doctoral research examines women's civil society in Iraq and their work in the post-2003 context. She is also a PhD student under the Australian Research Council Linkage Project 'Towards Inclusive Peace' partnered with the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade.

Raquel da Silva is a British Academy Postdoctoral fellow in the International Development Department at the University of Birmingham. Her current research explores the interplay between narratives of intervention and statebuilding and the life stories of former foreign fighters, former soldiers and their respective families. She has recently published a monograph entitled Narratives of Political Violence: Life Stories of Former Militants (Routledge, 2019). She tweets @RaquelBPSilva.

Sara Dezalay is Senior Lecturer in International Law and International Relations at the Cardiff School of Law and Politics and Senior Researcher at Global Justice Lab, Munk School of Global Affairs, University of Toronto. Her research areas include international justice; law and diplomacy in global governance; and the roles played by lawyers in the transformation of the state and the position of Africa in globalisation.

Outi Donovan is a Senior Research Fellow in the School of Politics and International Studies at University of Leeds. Her monograph, The Contentious Politics of Statebuilding (Routledge, 2017) examines in detail the dynamics between the national and international statebuilding actors outlined in this chapter. Outi's current research project, funded by the Economic and Social Science Research Council, investigates the notion of 'responsibility to rebuild' as a part of the responsibility to protect principle. Her research on statebuilding has appeared in Cooperation and Conflict and Global Governance and Peacebuilding, among other journals.

Lorraine Elliott is Professor (Emerita) in the Department of International Relations, Coral Bell School of Asia Pacific Affairs at The Australian National University. She led the Transnational Environmental Crime project at the ANU, funded by an Australian Research Council Linkage grant and has published extensively in this field, along with work on global and regional (Asia Pacific) environmental governance, politics and ethics. She is a member of the Scientific Steering Committee of the global Earth System Governance project, the Network of Experts for the Geneva-based Transnational Initiative Against Organised Crime, and a former Chair of the Board of Directors of the Academic Council on the United Nations System.

Catherine Goetze is Senior Lecturer in International Relations at the University of Tasmania which she joined in 2016. She was Head of the School of International Studies at the University of Nottingham in Ningbo from 2007 to 2014. Her research focuses on the sociology of globalisation and she has widely published in international relations, peace and intervention studies and on international political theory. She has recently published a major study on the sociology of United Nations peacebuilding missions, The Distinction of Peace (University of Michigan Press, 2017). Currently, Dr Goetze is working on a project on cosmopolitanism, families, migration and world politics.

Josefin Graef is a Dahrendorf Postdoctoral Fellow at the Hertie School of Governance in Berlin. She received her PhD from the University of Birmingham in 2017. Her research concerns the interplay between politics and language, with a particular interest in the construction of deviant politics through storytelling and its effects on policy-making. She is currently completing a monograph entitled The Politics of Reading Right-wing Violence, which explores the institutionalised narrative work that feeds the creation of knowledge about right-wing terrorism in contemporary Germany.

Sonja Grimm is interim Professor at the Department of Social Sciences, University of Basel, Switzerland while being on leave from her position as a Senior Lecturer at the Department of Politics and Public Administration, University of Konstanz, Germany. She holds a PhD from Humboldt University Berlin and has recently completed her postdoctoral qualification (Habilitation) at the University of Konstanz. She specialises in the field of democratisation, democracy promotion and development co-operation in developing, transitioning, fragile and post-conflict contexts. She has edited several special issues on post-conflict democratisation, most recently for the journal Conflict, Security and Development (18 (4) 2018) about 'Domestic elites and external actors in post-conflict democratization'. She is a member of the External Democracy Promotion Network funded by the Leibniz Association.

Shahar Hameiri is Associate Professor of International Politics at the School of Political Science and International Studies, University of Queensland. He obtained his PhD from the Asia Research Centre, Murdoch University in 2009. He is author of Regulating Statehood: State Building and the Transformation of the Global Order (Palgrave Macmillan, 2010), co-author with Caroline Hughes and Fabio Scarpello of International Intervention and Local Politics (Cambridge University Press, 2017), and co-author with Lee Jones, Governing Borderless Threats (Cambridge University Press, 2015). He tweets @ShaharHameiri.

Cecilia Jacob is Research Fellow in the Department of International Relations at The Australian National University. Her work focuses on civilian protection, internal conflict and political violence in South and Southeast Asia, and international norms of sovereign responsibility and protection. Her books include Child Security in Asia: The Impact of Armed Conflict in Cambodia and Myanmar (Routledge, 2014) and co-edited with Alistair D.B. Cook, Civilian Protection in the Twenty-First Century: Governance and Responsibility in a Fragmented World (Oxford University Press, 2016).

Stefanie Kappler is Associate Professor in Conflict Resolution and Peacebuilding at Durham University. Her main research interests include spatial approaches to peace, memory politics and the agency of the arts in peace processes. Recent publications include Peacebuilding and Spatial Transformation: Peace, Space and Place (Routledge, 2017), co-authored with Annika Björkdahl, as well as journal articles in Political Geography, Memory Studies, Cooperation and Conflict, Review of International Studies and Millennium: Journal of International Studies.

Roland Kostić is a Senior Lecturer in Holocaust and Genocide Studies at Uppsala University's Hugo Valentin Centre. His current research interests include knowledge production in conflict and peacebuilding interventions, diversification and privatisation of knowledge production by think tanks, experts, policymakers and diplomats, and the transfer and shaping of intervention knowledge by means of formal and informal networks. He also works on transitional justice and reconciliation after mass violence. Roland is co-editor with B. Bliesemann de Guevara of Knowledge and Expertise in International Interventions: The Politics of Facts, Truth and Authenticity (Routledge, 2018) and author of articles on the strategic use of knowledge by intimate networks of interveners and experts in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Florian P. Kühn is Senior Research Fellow at the Käte Hamburger Kolleg/Centre for Global Cooperation Research, Duisburg and an Associate Researcher at the Bonn International Center for Conversion. He has previously taught at Helmut Schmidt University (Hamburg), Humboldt University at Berlin and Otto von Guericke University Magdeburg (Germany). He is co-editor of the Journal of Intervention and Statebuilding and has published on security and peace, state–society relations, political economy and epistemology of international intervention. He is currently leading a research project on risk perceptions and resilience strategies in sub-state groups and is working on the book Ambiguity and Peace, which uses ambiguity theory to explain conflict dynamics. Recently, he has co-edited with Mandy Turner, The Politics of International Intervention: The Tyranny of Peace (Routledge, 2016) and a Special Forum on 'The "West" and the "Rest" in International Interventions' (Conflict, Security & Development 19 (3), 2019) as well as Risikopolitik – Eine Einführung (Springer, 2017).

Janosch Neil Kullenberg is a PhD fellow at the Bremen International Graduate School of Social Sciences and a member of the German Expert Pool for Peace Operations (ZIF) and the Oslo Research School on Peace and Conflict. His research interest in international interventions was sparked by four years of practical experiences in East and Central Africa, including with the German Development Cooperation (GIZ) and the UN Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of Congo (MONUSCO). For his PhD on the coordination of international protection actors, he conducted expert interviews and participant observation in Geneva, New York and the DRC. He tweets @JNKullenberg.

Nicolas Lemay-Hébert is a Senior Lecturer in the Department of International Relations, Coral Bell School of Asia Pacific Affairs, The Australian National University. He is co-editor of the Journal of Intervention and Statebuilding and the Routledge Series in Intervention and Statebuilding. His research interests include the political economy of interventions, the political geography of interventions, local narratives of resistance to interventions, and peace-building and statebuilding issues.

Katja Lindskov Jacobsen is Senior Researcher at the University of Copenhagen's Centre for Military Studies in the Department of Political Science. Since 2010, she has published extensively on the subject of humanitarian refugee biometrics, including a monograph (The Politics of Humanitarian Technology, Routledge, 2015) as well as several journal articles (Security Dialogue, Citizenship Studies, Journal of Intervention and Statebuilding, ICRC Review, and others). More broadly, her research focuses on contemporary intervention practices, with a particular interest in technology and materiality including biometric voter registration, pirate prisons, and human-machine configurations, like Red Card Holder Teams, in contemporary coalition warfare.

Philipp Lottholz is a Post-Doctoral Research Fellow at the DFG Collaborative Research Centre/Transregio 138 "Dynamics of Security" and the Institute of Sociology at Justus Liebig University of Giessen, Germany. Besides post- and decolonial perspectives, Philipp is interested in ethnographic, practice-based and cooperative research approaches in peace, conflict and security studies and in processes of peace-/statebuilding and institutional reform in the post-Soviet space, as well as post-Socialist countries more generally.

Roger Mac Ginty is Professor at the Durham Global Security Institute, and the School of Government and International Affairs, at Durham University. He co-directs the Everyday Peace Indicators (with Pamina Firchow) and edits the journal Peacebuilding (with Oliver Richmond). He is interested in the interface between top-down and bottom-up approaches to peace.

Médéric Martin-Mazé holds a PhD in international relations from Sciences Po Paris, which he received in December 2013. His doctoral dissertation focused on the professionals of security who assist Central Asian Republics in securing their borders. Between 2014 and 2016, he worked as a Research Assistant at the Department of War Studies, King's College London. He was in charge of mapping the institutions and professions of security in Europe for the EU-Funded SOURCE Project. Since September 2016, he has been a Lecturer at the Département de Science Politique, Université Paris VIII/CRESPPA-LabToP. His current research interests span international organisations and security aid in postcolonial States as well as the practices and effects of antiterrorist practices in Europe. He has published in the Journal of Common Market Studies, Cultures et Conflits and International Political Sociology.

Xavier Mathieu is Lecturer at the Department of Politics, University of Liverpool. He was previously a Teaching Associate at Aston University and a post-doctoral fellow at the Centre for Global Cooperation Research (University of Duisburg-Essen). His research interests include the theory and practice of sovereignty, peacebuilding, civilisational politics and the theorising of 'difference' in international interventions. He has published articles on these topics in International Relations, the Journal of International Political Theory, Third World Quarterly and the Journal of Intervention and Statebuilding.

Claire Mcloughlin is a Lecturer in Political Sociology, University of Birmingham. Claire is a political sociologist specialising in sources of state legitimacy. Her special interest is on how and when public services become significant for processes of state (de-)legitimation. She has more than a decade's experience of designing and conducting research on the politics of service delivery in divided societies and conflict-affected states. She has played a leading role in major reviews of non-state service provision in developing countries and advised aid agencies on the links between service delivery, statebuilding and stability. She is also Deputy Director of the Developmental Leadership Program, which examines the role of politics and ideas in development.

Louise Wiuff Moe is an Associated Researcher at the Helmut Schmidt University. Her research combines theoretical and empirical perspectives on peacebuilding and security governance, with a regional focus on Africa. Her recent work explores changing norms and practices of interventionism; inter-organizational conflict and collaboration in peace operations in Africa, and comparative perspectives on South-South security collaboration.

Jelena Obradovic-Wochnik is Senior Lecturer in Politics and International Relations at Aston University, working on transitional justice, everyday experiences and urban geographies of violence in post-conflict settings. Her most recent work examines the reception of refugees along ‘the Balkan Route’. Her work has been published as a monograph, Ethnic Conflict and War Crimes in the Balkans: Narratives of Denial in Post-Conflict Serbia (I. B. Tauris, 2013). She is currently working on Spatial Politics of the ‘Refugee Crisis’ (Routledge Interventions, under contract). Her work has also appeared in journals including Political Geography, Journal of International Relations and Development, West European Politics, International Journal of Transitional Justice and others.

Maria O’Reilly is a Lecturer in Politics & International Relations at Leeds Beckett University, UK. Her research examines gender, justice, and security in post-conflict contexts, with a focus on the region of ex-Yugoslavia. She has published Gendered Agency in War and Peace (Palgrave Macmillan, 2018). The research for this chapter was supported by the Arts & Humanities Research Council (grant number AH/N00848/1).

Elisa Randazzo is Lecturer in Politics and International Relations at the University of Hertfordshire, where she is co-leader of the BA Politics and International Relations. She has previously taught at University College London, the London School of Economics and Political Science, and the University of Westminster, and is author of several peer-reviewed papers, including ‘The paradoxes of the everyday: Scrutinising the local turn in peacebuilding’ (Third World Quarterly, 2016). She has published Beyond Liberal Peacebuilding (Routledge, 2017). Her research interests include peacebuilding, local ownership, and statebuilding.

Róisín Read is a Lecturer in Peace and Conflict Studies at the Humanitarian and Conflict Response Institute of the University of Manchester. Her research explores the politics of humanitarian aid. In particular, she is interested in the politics of knowledge production and how this impacts on intervention practices, with a focus on South Sudan. She is a member of the editorial team for the Journal of Humanitarian Affairs.

Isabel Rocha de Siqueira is Associate Professor at the International Relations Institute (IRI), Pontifical Catholic University of Rio de Janeiro (PUC-Rio), Researcher at the BRICS Policy Centre, its attached think tank, and reviews editor for the Journal of Intervention and Statebuilding. She has carried out extensive work on the intersection between development and security, fragile states, quantification and the power of numbers. She has recently initiated a project on Critical Approaches to Development, based on Southern perspectives. She has also recently produced a report for the United Nations Office for South–South Cooperation on South–South Cooperation for Peace and Development, and her current work looks at feminist approaches to solidarity and activism in academia.

Fabio Scarpello is a Lecturer in Politics and International Relations at the School of Social Sciences, the University of Auckland. He obtained his PhD from the Asia Research Centre, Murdoch University in 2015. He is the co-author of International Intervention and Local Politics (Cambridge University Press, 2017), with Caroline Hughes and Shahar Hameiri, and has published in Review of International Political Economy, Journal of Contemporary Asia and Contemporary Politics, among others. He tweets @Fabio25770.

Kristan Stoddart was a Reader in the Department of International Politics at Aberystwyth University until 2018 where he was also the Deputy Director of the Centre for Intelligence and International Security Studies. From 2014 to 2017 he worked on a project examining Cyber Security Lifecycles funded by Airbus Group and the Welsh Government and is a member of the UK's Independent Digital Ethics in Policing Panel, a member of the Project on Nuclear Issues, a Fellow of the Higher Education Academy and a Fellow of the Royal Historical Society. He has spoken at a wide number of conferences, nationally and internationally, including NATO and US Strategic Command, and for various forms of media, including the BBC. He is the author or co-author of four books and many articles. He is currently an independent researcher working on three books: Cyberwar: Threats to Critical Infrastructure, its companion volume, Cyberespionage: Russian and Chinese uses against the West, and One Ring to Rule Them All? Comparative Studies of Cyber Security between States.

Astri Suhrke, a political scientist, is Senior Researcher at the Chr. Michelsen Institute, Bergen (www.cmi.no). She has written widely on conflict, intervention and humanitarian policies, including When More is Less: The International Project in Afghanistan (Hurst, 2011). Her latest publication is 'The moral economy of the resettlement regime' (with Adèle Garnier), in Adèle Garnier, Liliana Lyra Jubilut and Kristin Bergtora Sandvik (eds), Refugee Resettlement: Power, Politics, and Humanitarian Governance (Berghahn Books, 2018).

Jacqui True, FASSA is a Professor of Politics and International Relations and Director of Monash University's Centre for Gender, Peace, and Security. She is also an Australian Research Council Future Fellow and Global Fellow, Peace Research Institute, Oslo. She is the author of the prize-winning book, The Political Economy of Violence against Women (Oxford University Press, 2012) and co-editor with Sara E. Davies of The Oxford Handbook of Women, Peace, and Security (Oxford University Press, 2019).

Florian Weigand is an ESRC Postdoctoral Fellow in the Conflict and Civil Society Research Unit at the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE). His research is concerned with how conflict zones, borderlands and other supposedly 'un-governed' spaces function. He is particularly interested in the perspective of non-state actors and he has spent an extensive amount of time conducting research in Afghanistan and Southeast Asia. His forthcoming book is called Conflict and Transnational Crime: Borders, Bullets and Business in Southeast Asia (Edward Elgar).

Nina Wilén is Research Director for the Africa Programme at the Egmont Institute for International Relations and Assistant Professor at the Department of Political Science at the Université Libre de Bruxelles. She is also a Global Fellow at the Peace Research Institute in Oslo (PRIO). Her research interests include conflict resolution and peace processes and more specifically the role of gender and the military in peace processes. She has published extensively on these themes in a range of international academic journals such as Gender, Work and Organization, Third World Quarterly and Journal of Eastern African Studies. She is also the author of Justifying Interventions in Africa: (De) Stabilizing Sovereignty in Liberia, Burundi and the Congo (Palgrave Macmillan, 2012).

