

Contributors

Tom Baker is a Senior Lecturer in Human Geography at the University of Auckland, New Zealand. His research examines the politics and practice of policy-making and the governance of socio-economic marginality. His previous and current research focuses on homelessness, housing, social security and drug treatment.

Mauricio I. Dussauge-Laguna is a Professor-Researcher at the Centro de Investigación y Docencia Económicas (CIDE) in Mexico City, Mexico. His research interests are in the fields of comparative Public Administration and Public Policy, Public Management, and Regulation. His writings on policy transfer, administrative reforms, civil service systems and other subjects have been published in the Journal of Comparative Policy Analysis, Governance, Policy Studies, Political Studies Review, Gestión y Política Pública and Foro Internacional, among others. He is a member of the editorial boards of Public Administration and the International Review of Administrative Sciences.

Roosa Jolkkonen is a DPhil Researcher at the Department of Social Policy and Intervention at the University of Oxford, UK. Her research interests comprise third sector actors, transnational social policy processes, and social policies in the Global South, with a regional focus on sub-Saharan Africa. Her doctoral study examines contemporary philanthropic development aid and the distinctiveness of its social policy influence within the changing aid landscape.

Olga Löblová is a Postdoctoral Researcher at the University of Cambridge, UK, working on regulation of cancer screening and molecular diagnostics. She holds a PhD in public policy from Central European University (2016), where she studied the (non) diffusion of health technology assessment agencies in Central and Eastern Europe. She is interested in all things health policy, specifically the politics of reimbursement decisions.

Pauline McGuirk is a Senior Professor in the School of Geography and Sustainable Communities at the University of Wollongong, Australia. Her research involves critical studies of urban governance, its changing geographies, material practices and politics, and the differential implications for urban places, communities, subjectivities and power.

Sergio Montero is an Assistant Professor of Urban and Regional Development at CIDER, an Interdisciplinary Center for Development Studies at the Universidad de los Andes in Bogotá, Colombia. Sergio's interests are in the governance of urban and regional planning, the social construction and circulation of urban policy models and 'best practices', and local and regional economic development policy, with an emphasis on Latin American cities and regions.

Michelle Morais de Sá e Silva is Wick Cary Professor of International Studies and Assistant Professor of International and Area Studies at the Department of International and Area Studies, University of Oklahoma, USA. Morais was the Coordinator General for International Cooperation at Brazil's Ministry of Human Rights between 2011 and 2014. In 2015, she completed a year of post-doctoral research at the Carr Center for Human Rights Policy, Harvard Kennedy School of Government. Her research agenda has mostly been focused on issues of international cooperation for development, policy diffusion and international comparative education.

Alexandru Rusu is a PhD researcher at the Utrecht World Health Organization Collaborating Centre for Pharmaceutical Policy and Regulation, the Netherlands. He is also working on global policy for the innovative pharmaceutical industry. Alexandru is interested in health care public policy, with a focus on the circulation of pharmaceutical policies and the various actors involved in this process.

Titilayo Soremi holds a PhD in Politics from the University of Exeter, UK. She investigated the role of policy narratives in the transfer of renewable energy and disaster risk reduction policies to the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS). She supports teaching of public policy courses at the University of Exeter. Titilayo has experience working in international non-governmental organisations and private corporations. Her research interests include policy transfer, policy narratives, sustainable development and regional integration.

Jennifer Spence is a Postdoctoral Fellow and Research Associate at Carleton University's School of Public Policy and Administration and a Fellow with the Centre for International Governance Innovation (CIGI) in Canada. An expert in international governance, institutional effectiveness and public policy, Jennifer has a particular interest in the opportunities and challenges facing the Arctic region. Her current research is focused on mapping and understanding the role of Global Policy Advisory Systems in global and domestic policymaking processes.

Christopher Walker is the Head of the School of Social Sciences, University of New South Wales, Australia. Most recent research projects have examined the transfer and adaption of policy and regulatory practices in the Australian trucking sector to various countries such as South Africa and Sweden. Christopher is also active in executive education and researches the teaching and development of policy practitioner skills. He holds an adjunct appointment with the Australia and New Zealand School of Government, contributing to their postgraduate and executive education programmes.

Astrid Wood is an Assistant Professor in the School of Geography, Politics and Sociology at Newcastle University in the United Kingdom. She is an urban geographer concentrating on governance and the built environment in cities of the Global South. Her research on policy mobilities and critical urban studies considers the range of political engagements and exchanges occurring through the localisation of global urban policy. This academic work draws on nearly two decades shaping the urban form in over thirty countries.