About the authors

Donna Ladkin, PhD is Professor of Leadership and Ethics at Antioch University's Graduate School of Leadership and Change in the USA. A philosopher and musician by background, Donna's work explores leadership as a lived phenomenon, focusing particularly on its aesthetic, ethical and embodied aspects. Her philosophically informed approach to leadership has been published in journals such as Leadership Quarterly, Business Ethics Quarterly, the Journal of Business Ethics and Leadership. She lives in mid-coast Maine with her husband, Robin.

Rita A. Gardiner, PhD is an Assistant Professor in Critical Policy, Equity, and Leadership Studies, Faculty of Education, Western University. Rita has published extensively on diverse topics such as authentic leadership, organizational ethics and questions of gender. Her publications include Gender, Authenticity and Leadership: Thinking with Arendt (Palgrave Macmillan, 2015), and articles in Business Ethics Quarterly, Leadership, Organization, and Gender, Work, and Organization. Currently, she is working on a social science and humanities funded project that examines the implementation of sexual violence policies in Canadian universities, as well as a monograph, to be co-authored with Dr. Katy Fulfer, on questions of home and belonging in the work of Hannah Arendt.

Claire O'Neill, PhD is a Lecturer in Management at the new School of Management, University of Bristol, UK. Her interest in gender, leadership and phenomenology comes from her PhD research, which was completed in 2016, and she has recently published in the journal Leadership. She is currently working on educational research, with a particular emphasis on feminist and embodied pedagogies.

Perttu Salovaara, PhD works as a university lecturer at the Faculty of Management, Tampere University, Finland, and as an organization consultant at Renesans Consulting. He has recently published articles on spacing leadership, Henri Lefebvre's space concept, co-working, and on hermeneutics in qualitative research. He has produced academic documentary films on leadership and co-working. At the moment Perttu's research focus is on self-managing organizations, plural and collective forms of leadership, and the community-building around craft breweries.

Tayo Switzer, PhD is an executive coach and consultant who has worked with senior leaders in a variety of industries including retail, healthcare, higher education and insurance. His leadership practice focuses on building organizational trustworthiness by increasing leadership effectiveness. He lives in Columbus, Ohio with his wife and two sons.