Contributors

Jenny Alsarve is a Senior Lecturer in Sociology at Örebro University, Sweden. Her research focuses on parents’ reconciliation of work and family, transition to parenthood, family life after divorce and lone motherhood.

Sonia Bertolini is Associate Professor at the University of Turin, where she teaches Sociology of Work. Her research interests concern labour market flexibilization; youth labour market entry; female labour market participation, labour market flexibilization and transition to adult life; Sociology of Professions.

Katarina Boye is an Associate Professor of Sociology at the Swedish Institute for Social Research. She studies the intersection between family and labour market and focuses particularly on consequences of the division of work between men and women.

Sandra Buchler is a Senior Lecturer at the Department of Sociology at the Goethe University Frankfurt am Main. Her current research focuses on gender attitudes, the transition to parenthood, how gender influences individuals’ and couples’ labour market careers and occupational segregation by gender.

Anna Dechant is a Researcher at the Federal Institute for Population Research (BiB), Germany. Her research focuses on cultural conceptions of family and the division of paid and unpaid work within couples.

Marie Evertsson is Professor of Sociology in Social Policy at Stockholm University, Sweden. She is affiliated with the Stockholm University Linnaeus Center on Social Policy and Family Dynamics in Europe (SPaDE). Her research focuses on (in)equalities in the home and in the labour market in different-sex and same-sex couples from an internationally comparative perspective.

Nadia Girardin is preparing a PhD at the University of Lausanne. Her main research interest is on the transition to parenthood in Switzerland that she explores through a life course perspective.

Daniela Grunow is a Professor of Sociology at the Goethe University Frankfurt, Germany. Her research focuses on the interaction of market work and gender relations in different welfare regimes. She currently holds a Goethe Fellowship, which promotes research-excellence in the humanities and social sciences at the Forschungskolleg Humanwissenschaften in Bad Homburg.
Contributors

Doris Hanappi is a Social Scientist working with the Department of Reproductive Health and Research at the World Health Organisation (WHO). Her main research areas are the social, economic, and demographic factors of fertility, employment, and well-being.

María José González is an Associate Professor in the Department of Political and Social Sciences at Pompeu Fabra University (UPF) in Barcelona. Her research focuses on the study of family sociology, gender inequalities, child welfare, family policy, social inequalities and comparative sociology.

Teresa Jurado-Guerrero is a Professor at the National University of Distance Education (UNED) in Madrid, Spain. Her research focuses on comparative social policies, youth, family and gender, in particular undoing gender in housework, in parenting and at the workplace. She currently coordinates a European Union project on Men in Care (MiC): Promoting caring masculinities from workplaces (VS/2018/0417).

Irene Lapuerta is an Associate Professor in the Department of Sociology and Social Work at the Public University of Navarra (UPNA) in Pamplona. Her research focuses on the study of family policies and gender inequalities in the labour market.

Jean-Marie Le Goff is Senior Researcher at the Centre of Life Course and Inequalities Studies (Lines) at the University of Lausanne and affiliated to the Swiss national centre of competencies in research overcoming vulnerability: life course perspective (NCCR Lives). His topics of interest are on life course transitions, especially, union formation and transition to parenthood and on the evolution of domestic tasks during these transitions.

Teresa Martín-García is a Tenured Scientist within the research group on Demographic Dynamics at the Center for Human and Social Sciences of the Spanish Council for Scientific Research (CSIC), Madrid. Her research focuses on fertility, the (new) family formation process, the intertwining of the education, work and family trajectories for both women and men and the new role of men in family dynamics.

Rosy Musumeci is Postdoctoral Researcher of Sociology at the University of Turin, Italy. Her main research interests are: transition to parenthood, work-family balance, parenting cultures, job insecurity, working trajectories, social exclusion of youth, and comparative qualitative analysis.

Manuela Naldini is an Associate Professor of Sociology of the Family, at University of Turin, Italy. The main areas of interests are: family changes and social policy, comparative welfare state, gender studies, work-family reconciliation issues, childcare, transition to parenthood and migrant families.

Olga Nešporová is a Researcher at the Research Institute for Labour and Social Affairs in Prague. Her research interest focuses on parenthood, combining care and paid work, intergenerational relations, and family policy. She follows Czech parents in her longitudinal research.

Maria Reimann is an Anthropologist working at the Department of Ethnography and Culture Anthropology of the University of Warsaw. She is writing her PhD under the supervision of Daniela Grunow on transition to parenthood in Europe. Her main academic interests are family, parenthood, and childhood.

Annika Rinklake is a Researcher at the State Institute for Family Research at the University of Bamberg (ifb), Germany. Her research interests include couples’ division of paid and unpaid work as well as late employment careers and the transition to retirement.

Christine Roman is a Professor of Sociology at Örebro University, Sweden. Her area of research interest is continuity and change in gender relations in modern society, with a particular focus on parenting and the reconciliation of paid work and family commitments and the family division of work.

Eva-Maria Schmidt is Senior Researcher at the Austrian Institute for Family Studies at the University of Vienna. Her main research interests cover family practices, paid and unpaid work, child(ren) and childcare, parenthood and parental involvement, gender, and corresponding policies, as well as qualitative research methodology.

Marta Seiz holds a PhD in Political and Social Science from Universitat Pompeu Fabra. She currently works as Postdoctoral Researcher at the National University of Distance Education (UNED) in Madrid, Spain. Her research focuses on family-related sociodemographic issues, such as couple specialization dynamics, union formation patterns, and the interrelation of family, employment and income trajectories.

Paola Maria Torrioni is Associate Professor in Sociology of Cultural Processes. Her research interests are focused on family, youth transition from parental household, transition to parenthood, socialization processes, and mixed-methods research programs. She has technical skills in quantitative analysis and in longitudinal qualitative analysis.

Susanne Vogl is a Postdoctoral Researcher at the University of Vienna. Her research agenda focuses on research methodology. She strives for improving existing methods in social science and developing techniques and methods further. Susanne Vogl’s substantive fields of research include the sociology of deviance, children and young people, family and life course.

Ulrike Zartler is an Associate Professor of Family Sociology at the University of Vienna. She is a childhood and family researcher with a focus on family transitions, divorce and post-divorce families. She is specialized in qualitative research methods and has used a multiple-perspectives approach in numerous studies. Her main research areas cover childhood, youth and family sociology, family transitions, legal aspects of childhood and family, and child participation.