Robert Agranoff, Ph.D., was a Professor Emeritus at the O’Neill School of Public and Environmental Affairs at Indiana University-Bloomington. He joined the university in 1980 and continued to be active in research, teaching, and professional service until his death in November of 2019. He specialized in intergovernmental relations and management, public administration, economic and community development, and federalism. Agranoff’s books and scholarship garnered national recognition and honors. Collaborative Public Management (Georgetown University Press 2004), co-authored with Michael McGuire, won the American Political Science Association’s prestigious Martha Derthick Book Award and the National Academic of Public Administration’s Louis Brownlow Book Award. He was also the author of Collaborating to Manage: A Primer for the Public Sector (Georgetown University Press 2012) and Managing within Networks: Adding Value to Public Organizations (Georgetown University Press 2007), which was winner of both the Best Book Award from the Public and Nonprofit Division of the Academy of Management and the 2008 Best Book Award given by the Section on Public Administration Research of the American Society for Public Administration. He applied his award-winning scholarship on the subject to contributions internationally, with project involvement in South Africa, Australia, Ukraine, and Spain, and since 1990 was affiliated on a regular basis with the Government and Public Administration Program of the Instituto Universitario Fundación José Ortega y Gasset in Madrid, Spain. He was also involved in establishing outreach programs for the Institute for Public Governance, ESADE Business School in Barcelona and Madrid.

Lisa Blomgren Amsler is a Distinguished Professor and the Keller-Runden Professor in the Paul H. O’Neill School of Public and Environmental Affairs, Indiana University, Bloomington. She is also the Saltman Senior Scholar at the William S. Boyd School of Law, University of Nevada, Las Vegas. An elected fellow of the National Academy of Public Administration and recipient of the American Bar Association Section of Dispute Resolution Award for Outstanding Scholarly Work and the Dwight Waldo Award from the American Society for Public Administration, her research addresses collaborative governance, public engagement, public law, and dispute resolution. Her 2005 article on new governance practice (co-authored with Tina Nabatchi and Rosemary O’Leary) was named one of the “75 most influential articles” of the past 75 years by Public Administration Review. Her newest book is Dispute System Design: Preventing, Managing, and Resolving Conflict (with Janet Martinez and Stephanie Smith, Stanford University Press 2020).

Christopher Ansell is Professor of Political Science at the University of California, Berkeley. He received his B.A. in Environmental Science from the University of Virginia and his Ph.D. in Political Science from the University of Chicago. He is the author or editor of ten books, including The Protective State (Cambridge University Press 2019), Pragmatism and Political Crisis Management: Principle and Practical Rationality during the Financial Crisis (with Martin Bartenberger; Edward Elgar Publishing 2019), Governance in Turbulent Times (editor, with Jarle Trondal and Morten Øgård; Oxford University Press 2017) and the Handbook
Shahinshah Faisal Azim holds a Ph.D. in Public Administration from the School of Public Affairs, Pennsylvania State University USA, an M.Sc. in Development Economics and Policy from the University of Manchester UK, and an MBA (Finance) from the University of the Punjab, Pakistan. He has diverse work experience of working in both government and non-government organizations. Starting his professional career as a banker, he later joined the Civil Service in 1998 and has held various important positions in the government of the Punjab, specifically in the areas of public policy, governance, and socio-economic protections. His research interests include intergovernmental relations and collaborative governance, and international development finance for alleviation of poverty and inequality, socio-economic development, social protection, population health, and nutrition. His repertoire of acquisitions also includes teaching Comparative Political Systems, and Comparative Health Policies and Systems at Pennsylvania State University, USA.

Olivier Berthod is Associate Professor in the ICN Business School, Berlin, Germany, and Nancy, France. His research reports on questions of organizational reliability, resilience and preparedness, governance of collaborations, and accountability, with a particular interest in the public and non-profit sectors, although not exclusively. Related projects received funding from the German Research Foundation (DFG), the Peter Pribilla Foundation, the Wagener Foundation, the Dahlem Research School, and the industry.

Carmine Bianchi is Professor of Public Management in the Department of Political Sciences, University of Palermo (Italy), where he is also the scientific coordinator of CED4 System Dynamics Group. At Palermo, he is also the director of the Doctoral program in “Model Based Public Planning, Policy Design, and Management,” and of the Master in Public Management. He is member of the Editorial Board of the following journals: International Journal of Public Administration, Public Administration Review, Public Management Review, and Public & Performance Management Review. He is also the Editor of the Book Series on “System Dynamics for Performance Management & Governance,” by Springer. Professor Bianchi has been visiting professor at the Rockefeller College of Public Affairs & Policy, University at Albany (USA), the College of Public Affairs at the University of Baltimore (USA), and the Pontifical Catholic University of Rio Grande do Sul, Porto Alegre (Brazil).

Elise Boruvka is earning her doctorate in education from the School of Education at Indiana University. Her research interests include management in higher education, organizational culture, and change in complex institutions. Her recent publications include a co-authored law review article (with Lisa Blomgren Amsler) on collaborative governance in higher education institutions and a co-authored article (with James L. Perry) on public motivational practices.

Thomas Andrew Bryer is Professor, School of Public Administration and Program Director, UCF Downtown Office of Community-Engaged Scholarship. Dr. Bryer conducts research in the areas of public participation and collaboration across segments of society. He has won multiple awards for his research, teaching, and service. In 2015, he was granted a Fulbright Core Scholar award to conduct research in Lithuania from 2015 to 2017, and he is currently a Fulbright Specialist, with work in Russia. He is Project Chief Researcher and Professor at Kaunas University of Technology (Lithuania), leading research on non-economic factors of emigration, and he is visiting professor in the Institute for Social Responsibility at Edge Hill University in the United Kingdom. At UCF Downtown, he serves as Program Director of the Office of Downtown Community-Engaged Scholarship. He is the author or editor of eight books, including: Higher Education beyond Job Creation: Universities, Citizenship, and Community (Lexington Books 2014), Poor Participation: Fighting the Wars on Poverty and Impoverished Citizenship (Lexington Books 2018), and Promoting Civic Health through University–Community Partnerships: Global Contexts and Experiences (Palgrave Macmillan 2020).

Jered B. Carr is Professor and Head of the Department of Public Administration, and Co-Director of the Networks & Governance Lab at the University of Illinois at Chicago. Jered’s current research focuses on the formation and performance of urban governance networks, shared public services/joint ventures, and the risk perceptions of public officials considering intergovernmental collaborations. He has served as Co-Editor-in-Chief and Managing Editor of the Urban Affairs Review since 2014.

Robin Chang is a Ph.D. researcher and lecturer in the School of Spatial Planning at the Technical University of Dortmund. Since 2015, Robin has worked out of the Department of European Planning Cultures at the Technical University of Dortmund and explored the topic of Temporary Uses. Her research on temporary uses focuses on comparative examples of stabilization in Germany and the Netherlands. The inspiration behind this comes from her professional experiences as a planner in Canada before pursuing graduate studies in Germany.

Louise K. Comfort is Professor and former Director, Center for Disaster Management, Graduate School of Public and International Affairs, University of Pittsburgh. She is also Affiliated Faculty, Policy Lab, Center for Information Technology Research in the Interest of Society (CITRIS), University of California, Berkeley; fellow of the National Academy of Public Administration; and recipient of the 2016 Distinguished Citizen Award from Macalester College, St. Paul, Minnesota. Her primary research interests are in decision-making under conditions of uncertainty and rapid change, interactions among technical and organizational systems under stress, and uses of information technology to develop decision support systems for managers operating under urgent conditions. She has engaged in field studies following twenty-three earthquake disasters in fourteen countries, including the recent 2015 Kathmandu-Gorkha earthquakes, Nepal. Her most recent book is The Dynamics of Risk: Changing Technologies and Collective Action in Seismic Events (Princeton University Press 2019).

Jackie Dingfelder, a public policy leader, has had a hand in most of Oregon’s recent landmark environmental policy reforms. She brings judgment borne of three decades of environmental consulting, an academic’s access to new insights, and an elected official’s leadership abilities. An adjunct professor at PSU’s Hatfield School of Government, she earned her Ph.D. there in 2017 after serving as an Axford/Fulbright Scholar in New Zealand. As senior advisor to Mayor Charlie Hales, she led Portland’s 2035 Comprehensive Land Use Plan, No-New-Fossil-Fuels Ordinance, and award-winning 2015 Climate Action Plan. Elected to office five times, she achieved numerous significant environmental and public interest policy reforms during 13 years as an Oregon legislator. She has directed two environmental non-profits and served as a planning and policy consultant.
Kirk Emerson is Professor of Practice in Collaborative Governance in the School of Government and Public Policy at the University of Arizona. She is the editor of Perspectives on Public Management and Governance and an elected fellow of the National Academy of Public Administration. In 2019, she was awarded the NASPAA/ASPA Distinguished Research Award and served as a Fulbright Specialist in China. She has worked in both academia and government at local and federal levels during her 35 plus years of public service. She served as the first director of the U.S. Institute for Environmental Conflict Resolution (1998–2008). Dr. Emerson currently studies collaborative governance, public engagement, interagency cooperation, and conflict management in the context of natural resources and public lands management, and implementation of the National Environmental Policy Act. Her current research is focused on how collaborative governance regimes change over time and the nature of collaborative governance in strong state settings.

Elizabeth Eppel (B.Sc. M.Ed(Admin) Ph.D.) is a Senior Research Fellow in the School of Government, Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. Her research interests are complexity in public policy processes, governance networks and collaborative governance. She was formerly a senior public servant.

Lasse Gerrits is a Professor in Urban Planning at the Institute for Housing and Urban Development Studies of the Erasmus University Rotterdam. His work focuses on the complexity sciences in conjunction with the governance and planning of urban and transport systems. He also has a strong interest in developing complexity-informed research methods, in particular Qualitative Comparative Analysis.

Marcia L. Godwin is Professor of Public Administration and Master of Public Administration (MPA) Director at the University of La Verne. Her research has been published in Administrative Theory & Praxis, Journal of Public Affairs Education, Policy Studies Journal, State and Local Government Review, Teaching Public Administration, and academic journals. She is a co-editor of The Roads to Congress series and Local Government and Mayoral Elections in 21st Century America (Routledge 2014). Godwin provides regular media commentary on elections and local government issues.

Naim Kapucu is Pegasus Professor and Director of the School of Public Administration at the University of Central Florida. His main research interests are emergency and crisis management, network leadership and governance, decision-making in complex environments, and social inquiry and public policy, and collaborative public management. His work has been published in Public Administration Review, Administration & Society, Journal of Public Administration Theory and Research, the American Review of Public Administration, Public Administration, International Journal of Mass Emergencies and Disasters, and Disasters: The Journal of Disaster Studies, Policy, and Management. He is also the co-author of the book, Network Governance: Theories, Concepts, and Applications (Routledge 2020).

Robyn Keast is a Professor in the School of Business and Tourism, Southern Cross University, Australia. Her research primarily studies network arrangements and collaborative practices. She is the former Chair of the Collaborative Research Network: Policy and Planning for Regional Sustainability. Focused on the study of both social and physical infrastructure issues, her research and publication portfolios are diverse, with findings regularly translated into practice tools. Keast is currently providing expert advice to several non-government collaborative projects. She has co-authored and co-edited several volumes on collaboration, most recently, Networks and Collaboration in the Public Sector: Essential Research Approaches, Methodologies and Analytical Tools (Routledge 2020).

Christopher Koliba is a Professor in the Community Development and Applied Economics Department at the University of Vermont (UVM), the Director of the Master of Public Administration (MPA) Program, the Co-Director of the Social Ecological Gaming and Simulation (SEGS) Lab (www.uvm.edu/~segs), the Associate Director of Vermont EPSCoR, and a fellow at the Gund Institute for Environment. He possesses a Ph.D. and an MPA from Syracuse University’s Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs. His research interests include environmental governance, governance networks, community resilience, network performance and accountability, with applications to water quality, food systems, energy systems, emergency and disaster response, and sustainable transportation systems. He is the lead author of Governance Network in Public Administration and Public Policy (second edition) (Routledge 2018) and has published over 80 peer-reviewed articles and book chapters. He is serves on the Executive Council of the Network of Schools of Public Affairs and Administration, and teaches courses pertaining to public policy and public affairs, public administration, organizational theory and behavior, systems analysis and strategic management, and the intersection of science and society.

Tomas M. Koontz is Professor of Environmental Policy at the University of Washington Tacoma. Following doctoral training at Indiana University under the advisement of Elinor Ostrom, he served on faculty at The Ohio State University School of Environment and Natural Resources for 16 years before returning to his home state of Washington. His research has examined collaborative watershed governance, institutions, citizen participation, and natural resource management. He has authored over 50 peer-reviewed journal articles, two books, and numerous policy reports and book chapters. Professor Koontz has served as associate editor of the Journal of Forestry and Society and Natural Resources, and he currently serves on the editorial board of the Policy Studies Journal and the Journal of Public Administration Research and Theory. His recent work examines polycentric governance and collaboration, including how science is used in ecosystem recovery partnerships in the Puget Sound region of Washington State, USA.

Joop Koppenjan is Professor of Public Administration at the Erasmus University Rotterdam. His research topics include public policy, policy networks, public–private partnerships and public management, with a focus on governance, stakeholder involvement, public values...

Heewon Lee is a doctoral candidate in the Askew School of Public Administration and Policy at the Florida State University. She seeks advancements of understandings on collaborative governance and sustainable management in both arenas of eco-friendly policies and technology innovation. Her current works focus on two lines of inquiry: (a) collaborative governance highlighting stakeholder engagement; and (b) behavioral aspects of decision-making in the policy process and the linkage to managerial arrangements.

Soomi Lee is an Associate Professor of Public Administration at the University of La Verne. She received her doctorate in Economics and Political Science from the Claremont Graduate University. Her primary areas of research and teaching encompass public finance, political economy, and regional/urban economics. Her research has appeared in many outlets, including Urban Affairs Review, Public Finance Review, State Politics and Policy Quarterly, Social Science Journal, Journal of Socio-Economics, Cityscape, and Basic Income Studies.

Jun Li is a Ph.D. student in the Department of Public Administration at the University of Illinois at Chicago. She has a background in economics and international trade and teaching experiences in higher education, and research interests in the complexities of interlocal collaborations, regional governance and social networks in metropolitan areas. Her other interests include co-production in non-profits and policy implementations and representative bureaucracies.

Siobhan McQuaid is Associate Director of Innovation at the Centre for Social Innovation in Trinity College Dublin. Her research is focused on sustainability and resilience in particular the financing and governance of climate change initiatives such as nature-based solutions to societal challenges and nature-based entrepreneurship. She has extensive experience in innovation practice supporting the development and implementation of innovation in the private, not-for-profit, government and academic sectors across Europe.

Jack Wayne Meek is a University of La Verne Academy Professor and Professor of Public Administration at the College of Business and Public Management at the University of La Verne in Southern California, where he serves as Director of the Center for Research and offers courses in research, managing complex systems and collaborative public management. His research focuses on metropolitan governance including the emergence of local and regional collaboration and partnerships, policy networks and citizen engagement. Jack has co-authored and co-edited books on governance networks, business improvement districts, intergovernmental relations and complex governance systems. Jack served as President of the National Association of Schools of Public Policy Affairs and Administration (NASPAA) in 2018. With the American Society for Public Administration (ASPA), Jack served as Chair of the Section on Intergovernmental Administration & Management, the Executive Board of the Section on Complexity, Governance and Networks and the Executive Board of the Southern California Chapter.

Aravind Menon is a doctoral candidate in the Public Administration program at The Pennsylvania State University. Prior to joining the program, he was the Associate Director of Research at the University of Pennsylvania’s Leonard Davis Institute of Health Economics. While at LDI, he oversaw research focused on health economics and policy through a cooperative venture among Penn’s health professions, business, and communications schools (Medicine, Wharton, Nursing, Law School, and Annenberg School for Communication) and the Children’s Hospital of Philadelphia. Prior to joining UPenn, he was the Assistant and Interim Director of Operations and Planning in the Pennsylvania State University’s Office of the Associate VP for Health Sciences Research at their medical campus in Hershey. Aravind earned his Master of Health Administration degree at Penn State Harrisburg and his BS in Microbiology, and Neuroscience from the Ohio State University.

Göktuğ Morçöl is a Professor of Public Policy and Administration. He has authored, edited, and co-edited seven books, including Challenges to Democratic Governance in Developing Countries (Springer 2014), A Complexity Theory for Public Policy (Routledge 2012), Business Improvement Districts: Research Theory and Controversies (CRC Press 2008), and A New Mind for Policy Analysis (Praeger 2002). His articles have appeared in Public Administration Review, Administration and Society, Administrative Theory and Praxis, Policy Sciences, Public Administration Quarterly, Politics and Policy, International Journal of Public Administration, Journal of Urban Affairs, Urban Affairs Review, and Emergence. He served as the first Chair of the Section on Complexity and Network Studies of the American Society for Public Administration. He also served as the founding editor-in-chief of the journal Complexity, Governance & Networks. He is currently an editorial board member of this journal, the International Journal of Public Administration, and Public Organization Review.

Tina Nabatchi is the Joseph A. Strasser Endowed Professor in Public Administration and the Director of the Program for the Advancement of Research on Conflict and Collaboration (PARCC) at the Syracuse University Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs. An elected fellow of the National Academy of Public Administration, Dr. Nabatchi’s award-winning research and teaching, which focuses on citizen participation, collaborative governance, conflict resolution, and challenges in public administration, is recognized nationally and internationally. She has presented to and trained a wide variety of executive and student groups both in the United States and abroad and has consulted for and worked with several United States federal agencies, as well as with numerous international, national, and local non-governmental organizations.

Frank Naert holds a Ph.D. in Economics from Ghent University. Before his retirement in October 2019 he was a full professor at Ghent University lecturing on public finance, European economic integration and competition policy. He was Chair of the Department of Public Governance, Management and Finance at the Faculty of Economics and Business Administration between 2013 and 2018. Since 2016 he serves as a member of the Board of Management of IASIA.
Aitziber Egusquiza Ortega graduated as an architect with post-graduate degrees in Urban Management and Cultural Heritage and a Ph.D. on decision-making processes for improving sustainability and liveability of historic urban environments using multiscale information management. She is coordinator of SHELTER (Sustainable Historic Environments holistic reconstruction through Technological Enhancement & community based Resilience), a four-year ongoing Horizon 2020 project under the topic “Resilience and sustainable reconstruction of historic areas to cope with climate change and hazard events” and currently is the leader of the work package regarding “New governance, business and financing models for NB-oriented urban planning” in a Nature4cities project and the work package regarding “Conceptual and operational framework for heritage-led rural regeneration” in a RURITAGE project. She is also head of the project that established the sustainability standard for the Galapagos islands.

Sofia Prysmakova-Rivera is a Visiting Assistant Professor of Community-Engaged Scholarship at the University of Central Florida, where she earned a Ph.D. in Public Affairs. Over several years she has been working on a wide range of domestic and international research projects in the areas of collaborative governance, network responsiveness, civic engagement, and empowerment of at-risk populations in the crisis management context of pandemics, as well as man-made and natural disasters. Sofia has authored several research publications, including a co-authored book, Poor Participation: Fighting the Wars on Poverty and Impoverished Citizenship (Lexington Books 2018).

Kathy Quick, Associate Professor, is the Chair of the Leadership and Management area of the Humphrey School of Public Affairs and Academic Co-Director of the Center for Integrative Leadership, both at the University of Minnesota. Her work focuses on bringing diverse groups of stakeholders together to collaborate on complex, often divisive public problems. Since 2013, she has been collaborating with four tribal governments in Minnesota to improve roadway safety in reservations. She advocates for improving public affairs education to address damaging ignorance about tribal sovereignty, history, and rights. She received her Ph.D. in Planning, Policy, and Design from University of California, Irvine.

Mary Lee Rhodes (BA, M.Sc., MBA, Ph.D.) is an Associate Professor of Public Management at Trinity College, Dublin. Her research is focused on complex public service systems and the dynamics of performance, value and impact. She is the founder and Co-Director of the Trinity Centre for Social Innovation and has expertise in research, consulting and management in the public and non-profit sectors along with extensive private sector experience in banking and ICT management.

José Sánchez is a Ph.D. student in the Department of Public Administration at the University of Illinois at Chicago. His research interests are metropolitan governance, collaboration involving megacities and central cities. José is particularly interested in the role of central big metropolises in metropolitan regions and networks. He is an editorialist at El Universal, the largest national newspaper in Mexico, and writer of novels and short tales for young readers.

Michael D. Siciliano is Associate Professor in the Department of Public Administration at the University of Illinois at Chicago and Co-Director of the Networks & Governance Lab. Michael studies how humans and organizations collaborate to improve society. His work explores the cognitive, social, and institutional factors influencing the formation and performance of networks in the public sector. He currently serves as associate editor of the Journal of Public Administration Research and Theory.

Eva Sørensen is Professor of Public Administration and Democracy at Roskilde University. She received her M.A. and Ph.D. in Political Science from the University of Copenhagen. She is author of 13 books including Interactive Political Leadership (Oxford University Press 2020), Interactive Governance: Advancing the Paradigm (Oxford University Press 2019) (with Jacob Torfing, B. Guy Peters and Jon Pierre), Collaborative Governance and Public Innovation in Northern Europe (Bentham Publishers 2014) (co-edited with Annika Agger, Bodil Damgaard and Andreas H. Krogh) and The Politics of Self-governance (Ashgate 2013) (co-edited with Peter Triantafillou). Her research focuses on current developments in democracy and their implications for politics, governance, forms of political leadership and the role of citizens in political decision-making and innovative problem solving and public value production.

Margaret Stout is an Associate Professor of Public Administration at West Virginia University, USA. Her research explores the role of public and non-profit actors in achieving social, economic, and environmental justice, with specific interests in administrative theory and its philosophical underpinnings. Following her first career as a practitioner, she continues a passion for local governance and community development through integrated community-engaged research and service learning with her graduate students. As a theorist, Stout has authored, edited, and co-authored several books that explore and conceptualize collaborative and integrative approaches to governance and public administration, particularly as they relate to public engagement. Recent work applies these theoretical frameworks to practice.

Craig W. Thomas is a Professor at the Daniel J. Evans School of Public Policy and Governance at the University Washington. His research analyzes collaboration among public, private, and non-profit partners on a wide variety of environmental topics, including habitat conservation planning, watershed management, and marine conservation. In addition to publications in numerous interdisciplinary journals, he is the author of Bureaucratic Landscapes: Interagency Cooperation and the Preservation of Biodiversity (MIT Press 2003) and co-author of Collaborative Environmental Management: What Roles for Government? (RFF Press 2004). He has served on the Board of Directors for the Public Management Research Association (PMRA) and on the Commission on Peer Review and Accreditation (COPRA) for the Network of Schools of Public Affairs and Administration (NASPAA). He also served as editor of the Journal of Public Administration Research and Theory and as Associate Dean of the Evans School of Public Policy and Governance.

Kurt Thurmaier is Distinguished Engagement Professor and Chair of the Department of Public Administration, and Director of the School of Public and Global Affairs at Northern Illinois University. His research interests include state and local public budgeting and finance, local government collaboration, intergovernmental fiscal relations, city–county consolidations, and comparative public management. His current research projects include citizen-engaged budgeting and planning in local governments. His career includes four years in the Wisconsin State Budget Office as a budget and management analyst; and consultant work on various US city–county consolidation efforts. He received his Ph.D. from the Maxwell School, Syracuse University, and his MPPA from UW-Madison. In addition to numerous published articles, he has co-authored or co-edited six books.

Jacob Torfing is M.A., Ph.D. and Professor in Politics and Institutions at the Department of Social Sciences and Business, Roskilde University, Denmark and Professor 2 at Nord University in Norway. He is Director of The Roskilde School of Governance at Roskilde University. His research interests include public sector reforms, political leadership, collaborative innovation and co-creation. He has published several books on these topics including Public Governance Paradigms: Competing and Coexisting (Edward Elgar Publishing 2020) (with Lotte Bøgh Andersen, Carsten Greve, and Kurt Klaudi Klausen), How Does Collaborative Governance Scale? (Policy Press 2018) (co-edited with Christopher Ansell), and Collaborative Innovation in the Public Sector (Georgetown University Press 2016). The latter received Choice Magazine’s 2017 Outstanding Academic Title Award.

Jenna Tyler is a Ph.D. candidate in the Public Affairs Ph.D. Program at the University of Central Florida. Her research focuses on evidence-informed decision-making, community flood risk management, and organizational disaster preparedness and recovery. Her research has been published in Public Administration Review, International Journal of Disaster Risk Reduction, and Natural Hazards, among other journals.

Evan Walter is Assistant Village Administrator for the Village of Burr Ridge, Illinois. He previously served as a management analyst for the city of Elgin, Illinois after earning his Master of Public Administration from Northern Illinois University. His capstone paper on risk assessment of city managers received the 2016 Pi Alpha Best MPA Paper Award.

Eunsil Yoo is a doctoral candidate in Public Administration at Pennsylvania State University. She received her B.A. in Political Sciences (International Relations) from Handong Global University and her master’s in Governance at Sungkyunkwan University in South Korea. Prior to joining the doctoral program, she worked for nonprofit organizations and research institutions as a coordinator and researcher for five years, focusing on collaborative networks and citizen participation for social integration and conflict management. Currently, Eunsil is writing her dissertation about collaborative networks in a home visiting program and teaching undergraduate courses related to politics and public policy. She is interested in conducting research on collaborative governance, nonprofit management, and social network analysis, as well as facilitating collaboration and creating collaborative environments in the public sector.

Asim Zia is serving as a Professor of Public Policy and Computer Science in the Department of Community Development and Applied Economics, with a secondary appointment in the Department of Computer Science, at the University of Vermont (UVM). He is Director of the Institute for Environmental Diplomacy and Security and a founding Co-Director of the Social Ecological Gaming and Simulation lab at UVM. He has a Ph.D. in Public Policy from the Georgia Institute of Technology and is the recipient of the 2004–2005 best dissertation award from the Association for Public Policy Analysis and Management and a post-doctoral fellowship from the National Center for Atmospheric Research (2004–2006). He is a fellow at the Gund Institute for Environment, a senior research fellow for the Earth System Governance project and a Fulbright Global Scholar (July 2020–June 2022).