Contributors

Yuri Ivanovich Basilov is an Associate Researcher at the European University at St. Petersburg, Russia, and an archival researcher in Russian archives for Western scholars. His research interests cover Russian and German intellectual history, history of Eurasianism, history of memory of wars and revolutions in Russia. He has presented various papers on the subjects, including ‘Eurasianism and Turanism’ (2007), ‘Eurasian discourse within the Russian intellectual culture of modernity’ (2006) and ‘Eurasianism and German geopolitics’ (2003). More recently, he published an article on ‘The centenary of 1917 in the city of three revolutions’ (2017, in Russian).

Nutsa Batiashvili is an Associate Professor of Anthropology and the Dean of the Graduate School at the Free University of Tbilisi, Georgia. She holds an MA in Psychology and a PhD in Anthropology from Washington University in St Louis, USA. She was a Postdoctoral Fellow at the University of Oxford, UK. Her book, The Bivocal Nation: Memory and Identity on the Edge of Empire (Palgrave Macmillan, 2018), is about a divided nation and polarized notions of nationhood. Her research is situated at the intersection of cultural anthropology, nationalism studies and the interdisciplinary field of cognitive sciences, with a particular interest in political cognition and theoretical stances bridging semiosis and embodiment. Her current project (funded by the Templeton Foundation) studies political and cognitive ecology of heritage objects in Upper Svaneti. She is currently working on a manuscript entitled ‘Embodied Politics’ that is based on a decade of ethnographic research and examines the relationship between mechanisms that underlie human cognition and the forms of everyday political discourse.

Oliver Benoit is an artist and Professor of Sociology in the Department of Humanities and Social Sciences at St. George’s University, Grenada. His areas of focus are comparative and historical sociology, political sociology, Caribbean studies, and the visual arts in the Caribbean. He holds a PhD from Brandeis University, USA and an MFA from Plymouth University, UK. As an abstract artist, he seeks to provoke the viewer, urging them to question their reality in relation to some of the watershed moments of our time. Through this strong combination of artistry and intellectual intensity, the moods in Oliver’s compelling paintings rise out of their sculptural, labyrinthine forms. These sensitive yet formidable works speak to us on many levels and offer themselves as mirrors to our own psychologies. The emotional, intellectual and aesthetic power of Oliver Benoit’s work is a testament to his commitment to both the discipline and the exuberance of his art.

Nick Brooke is an Associate Lecturer in International Relations at the Handa Centre for the Study of Terrorism and Political Violence at the University of St Andrews in Scotland. His research focuses on the causes of terrorism and the circumstances under which terrorist movements emerge. He also works on popular responses to terrorism and counterterrorism, and representations of political violence in popular culture. Nick’s first academic monograph, Terrorism and Nationalism in the United Kingdom: The Absence of Noise, was published by Palgrave and examines the relationship between nationalism and political violence in the United Kingdom, considering why political violence was a greater feature of the nationalist movements in some parts of the British Isles than others.

Zhidong Cai is an Associate Professor in the Department of Philosophy of Shanghai Normal University, China. He is the Executive Director of the Chinese Legalist Society, the Director of the Chinese Practical Theory Society and the Shanghai Confucian Society. He also serves as the Deputy Director of the Zhuangzi Committee of the Shanghai Yanhuang Culture Research Association and a researcher of the Gentleman Culture Research Center at Shanghai Jiaotong University. He is the author of six books on Chinese philosophy and more than 60 academic papers. He has led and participated in various research projects funded by the National Social Science Foundation and the Ministry of Education of China.

Leone Campos de Sousa is an Assistant Professor of Sociology in the Social Sciences Department at the Federal University of the State of Rio de Janeiro (UNIRIO) in Brazil. Currently, she is also the Director of the Program in Social Sciences for schoolteachers. Leone has a PhD in Sociology from The New School for Social Research in New York, USA. Her dissertation – ‘The myth of racial democracy and national identity in Brazil’ – was published in 2009. Leone has been predominantly writing and carrying out research on nationalism, national identity, as well as culture and politics in Brazil. More recently, Leone contributed with a chapter to the book Globalisation of Nationalism: The Motive-Force Behind Twenty-First Century Politics, edited by Professor Liah Greenfeld (Rowman & Littlefield, 2016).

Oyéshiku Carr is an American of Liberian descent. He immigrated to the United States with his family in 1978, where he completed his schooling. Dr Carr earned his BA in History from Wesleyan University in 1992 and his MA in History and PhD in Comparative Modern African Politics from Boston University, USA in 2008. Dr Carr’s academic interests are focused on the intersection between imperialism and African nationalism, as well as on African political philosophy – especially the thinking of Frantz Fanon. Dr Carr has worked as a practitioner in both the public and private sectors, including serving as an advisor to the US military, advising presidential campaigns, and classroom teaching. He currently lives and works in New York City.

Dylan Carson is a paralegal at Legal Action of Wisconsin, USA. He received his BA in Sociology from Bates College, Maine, USA in 2018. His research interests include the progressive rhetoric of far-right parties in Europe.

Liming Chen (PhD) is currently a lecturer at the Institute of Chinese Ethnic Theory and Policy of Minzu University of China. Her research interests cover China’s regional and ethnic autonomy and religious studies. She has participated in research projects funded by the National Social Science Foundation of China, including the most recent: ‘The practice of ethno-national policies in multi-ethnic countries’. She has written both journal articles and policy papers on related subjects. Her major publications include ‘Relational rationality: a new perspective on the Chinese nation’ (2018) and ‘The thinking of Chinese ethnic studies from the Report of the 17th National Congress of the CPC’ (2009).

Yanbin Chen is an Associate Professor at the Institute of Chinese Ethnic Theory and Policy of Minzu University of China. He is also a member of the China Union of Anthropological and Ethnological Sciences (CUAES). His primary research interests include poverty of Chinese ethnic minorities and the Chinese government’s policies toward ethnic minorities. He has published books and articles on related subjects. Between 2014 and 2015, he visited Boston University, USA as a Research Fellow with funding support from the China Scholarship Council.

Yuk-man Cheung is an Associate Professor in the Faculty of International Relations at the Ritsumeikan University, Kyoto, Japan. He specializes in cultural and historical sociology, urban sociology, sociology of education, new institutionalism, as well as modern Japan and Hong Kong. He obtained his PhD from the Chinese University of Hong Kong. His recent research interests include nationalism/cosmopolitanism in East Asia, the translation of modernity in East Asia as seen from Japanese cultural industry and subcultures of anime, games, and illustrated novels, the temporal reconfiguration of cultural and social theory, and civilization studies.

Agustí Colomines i Companys (DPhil) is a tenured lecturer in Contemporary and World History and the Director of the Josep Termes Chair on History, Identities and Digital Humanities and Head of the Research Group on National Studies and Cultural Policy (GREENPoC) at the University of Barcelona, Spain. He is also member of the International Advisory Council of the Association for the Study of Ethnicity and Nationalism (ASEN). He was the Dean of the Arts and Humanities Studies at the Open University of Catalonia (UOC), Spain during 2010–11 and a Visiting Scholar at the University of East Anglia (1996), UK, and Boston University (2015) and University of Stanford (2018 and 2019), USA. He was the Director of the UNESCO Office in Catalonia (2004–07) and the President of the Linguapax Institute (2004–09). He was the Director of the Public Administration School of Catalonia (2016–18). He is a specialist in historiography and history of nationalism and a columnist in several Catalan newspapers. He contributes to radio and TV talk shows. He is an editor of the bilingual (Catalan–English) academic review Humanitats Digitals/Digital Humanities, and co-editor of the Catalan academic review Afers: Fulls de recerca i pensament and a member of the International Advisory Board of Nation and Nationalism.

Daniele Conversi is a Research Professor at the Ikerbasque Foundation for Science and the University of the Basque Country (EHU/UPV), Bilbao, Euskadi (Spain). He received his PhD at the London School of Economics, UK and taught in various institutions, including Cornell University and Syracuse University (USA) and the Central European University, Budapest, Hungary. His interests include theories of nationalism, globalization and climate change, with an emphasis on the comparative dimensions of boundary construction and the ‘nationalization of the masses’. He has worked on the relationship between nationalism and modernity, diaspora radicalization and the Internet, democracy and cultural diversity. Among other works, Daniele Conversi published The Basques, The Catalans, and Spain: Alternative Routes to Nationalist Mobilisation (University of Nevada Press, 2000) and brought together some of the most important theorists of nationalism in Ethnonationalism in the Contemporary World: Walker Connor and the Study of Nationalism (Routledge, 2002).

Emmanuel Dalle Mulle is a postdoctoral researcher and project coordinator at the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies, Geneva, Switzerland, where he is currently working on a project on majority–minority relations in Western Europe during the inter-war years. His research interests mainly lie with the history and politics of nationalism, nationalism and welfare, and the history of human rights and the nation-state.

Francesco Duina is Professor of Sociology at Bates College (USA). His interests lie at the intersections of economic and political sociology, international political economy and cultural sociology. He is especially interested in understanding how nation-states persist and operate in the age of globalization. In that context, he has written on a variety of themes – such as legal and democratic self-determination, trade policy, competition, consumer policy, food policy, nationalism and identity, and populism. His articles have appeared in journals such as the Journal of European Public Policy, Review of International Political Economy, Regulation & Governance, and Economy and Society. He has authored six books, including The Social Construction of Free Trade: The European Union, NAFTA, and Mercosur (Princeton University Press, 2006) and Broke and Patriotic: Why Poor Americans Love Their Country (Stanford University Press, 2018).

Liah Greenfeld is the author of numerous publications on nationalism, including the trilogy, Nationalism: Five Roads to Modernity (Harvard University Press, 1992), The Spirit of Capitalism: Nationalism and Economic Growth (Harvard University Press, 2001), and Mind, Modernity, Madness: The Impact of Culture on Human Experience (Harvard University Press, 2013), and such recent books as Edward Elgar’s Advanced Introduction to Nationalism, 2016, and Nationalism: A Short History, 2019, published by Brookings Institution Press. She is a University Professor and Professor of Sociology, Political Science, and Anthropology at Boston University in the United States.

Hongying Hu is an Associate Professor at the School of Humanities and Law School of Hebei University of Science and Technology, China. Her main research interests are Chinese state-building and governance. She has been writing about Chinese nationalism and state policies related to ethnic minorities in China. Her papers have been published in academic journals and official media outlets in China.

Ireneusz Pawel Karolewski is Professor of Political Theory and Democracy Research at the University of Leipzig, Germany. In 2009–19, he was Professor of Political Science at the University of Wrocław, Poland. Karolewski obtained his PhD in Political Science from the University of Potsdam, Germany, where he was Assistant Professor from 1999 to 2008. Since 2008, he has been Visiting Professor at Harvard University, USA, the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Israel and the Université de Montréal, Canada. His main areas of research are collective identity, citizenship and nationalism. His book publications include European Identity Revisited: New Approaches and Recent Empirical Evidence (Routledge, 2016), Civic Resources and the Future of the European Union (Routledge, 2012) and Citizenship and Collective Identity in Europe (Routledge, 2010).

Tung-Yi Kho is a scholar of modern China with a PhD in Social Anthropology (SOAS University of London), as well as in Cultural Studies (Lingnan University, Hong Kong). He is currently a Postdoctoral Fellow in the Department of Anthropology at the Chinese University of Hong Kong. His research interests cut across multiple fields, but their singular concern is with the human condition, especially with human livelihood and well-being under the conditions of modernity.
Athena S. Leoussi is Associate Professor of European History in the Department of Languages and Cultures, University of Reading, UK. She is a founder of the Association for the Study of Ethnicity and Nationalism (ASEN), and a founder editor and continuing editor of the journal, Nations and Nationalism. She has published extensively on the role of the visual arts in nation-building and the influence of the classical Greek cult of the body in redefining modern European national identities. She was one of the organizers of the British Museum’s exhibition, ‘Defining Beauty’ (2015). Her publications include, Nationalism and Classicism (Palgrave Macmillan, 1998), The Encyclopaedia of Nationalism (Transaction Publishers, 2001), Nationalism and Ethnosymbolism (edited with Steven Grosby for Edinburgh University Press, 2006), and Famous Battles and How They Shaped the Modern World (two vols. edited with Beatrice Heuser for Pen & Sword, 2018).

Tommy Leung Yiu-man is a post-1990s Hongkonger born in British Hong Kong two years before the city’s 1997 handover to PR-China. Developing his research interests in empirical and historical reconstruction of and civilizational comparisons between and within the cultural phenomena of Sinic Far East/East Asia and the West, he seeks to help resolve socio-political and psychological contradictions of modern Sinic identities in East Asian nations with regard to the globally relevant rising China. He is currently pursuing an MA in Archaeology and Ancient Near Eastern Cultures from Tel Aviv University, Israel, and an LLB from the University of London, after receiving a BA with first-class honours in Philosophy from the Anglo-American analytic and the ancient Chinese traditions from Lingnan University, Hong Kong. He is also an ardent traveller to 48 countries and an occasional but aspiring blogger and activist.

Eric Malczewski is an Assistant Professor in the Center for Public Administration and Policy at Virginia Tech, USA. He works on sociological theory, historical sociology, and culture. His central interests include the organizing principles of social science, epistemological issues in sociological theory, and classical sociological theory (with an emphasis on the thought of Émile Durkheim and Max Weber). He was a Lecturer on Social Studies at Harvard University, USA from 2012 to 2017. He is a Faculty Fellow at the Center for Cultural Sociology at Yale University, USA.

Joanna Beata Michlic is a social and cultural historian, and founder and first Director of HBI (Hadassah-Brandeis Institute) Project on Families, Children, and the Holocaust at Brandeis University in the United States. She is an Honorary Senior Research Associate at the UCL (University College London) Centre for the Study of Collective Violence, the Holocaust and Genocide, UCL Institute for Advances Studies, and an Honorary Senior Associate at the School of Slavonic and East European Studies (SSEES) in London. Her major publications include Neighbors Respond: The Controversy about Jedwabne (2004; co-edited with Antony Polonsky), Poland’s Threatening Other: The Image of the Jew from 1880 to the Present (translated into Polish in 2015 and nominated for the Best History Book for the Kazimierz Mocarski Award 2016 in Poland; Hebrew translation, with new epilogue, by Yad Vashem, in preparation, 2020), and Bringing the Dark Past to Light: The Reception of the Holocaust in Postcommunist Europe, co-edited with John-Paul Himka (Lincoln, NUP, 2012). Her latest edited book, Jewish Family 1939–Present: History, Representation, and Memory (Brandeis University Press/NEUP, January 2017) made it to the Ethical Inquiry list of the best books published in 2017 at Brandeis University. She is a recipient of many prestigious academic awards and fellowships, most recently Gerda Henkel Fellowship, 2017–21. She is currently working on a monograph on the history and memory of rescuers of Jews in Poland.

Jennifer E. Moore is an Associate Professor of Journalism at the University of Minnesota Duluth, USA. She received her PhD from the Hubbard School of Journalism and Mass Communication at the University of Minnesota Twin Cities. Her research interests include journalism history, visual communication, participatory news practices and digital news preservation. Moore’s work on the nineteenth-century illustrated press appears in issues of Journalism History, and several chapters in media history collections, including Sensationalism: Murder, Mayhem, Mudslinging, Scandals, and Disasters in 19th-Century Reporting (Transaction Publishers, 2013) and After the War: The Press in a Changing America, 1865–1900 (Transaction Publishers, 2017). An essay about her participatory news scholarship appears in Journalism Research that Matters (Oxford University Press, forthcoming). Her research awards include funding from the National Association of Broadcasters (NAB) and two National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) Summer Scholar Awards. She teaches courses in media history, digital journalism, social media and media ethics. Prior to academia, Moore worked as a radio reporter and as a digital content producer and manager.

Bo Petersson is Professor of Political Science and International Migration and Ethnic Relations at Malmö University, Sweden, where he is also founding Director of the research platform Russia and the Caucasus Regional Research (RUCARR). His special areas of interest include nationalism, legitimacy, authoritarianism and political myth. Geographically, he has often specialized in political developments in Russia and the former Soviet Union. He is the author of National Self-Images and Regional Identities in Russia (Ashgate, 2001; Routledge, 2018) and Stories about Strangers: Swedish Media Constructions of Socio-Cultural Risk (University Press of America, 2006). His most recent publications include Bo Petersson and Karina Vamling (eds), The Sochi Predicament: Contexts, Characteristics and Challenges of the Olympic Games in 2014 (Cambridge Scholars Publishing, 2013); Hans-Åke Persson, Bo Petersson and Cecilie Stokholm Banke (eds), Playing Second Fiddle? Contending Visions of Europe’s Future Development (Universus/Roos & Tegner, 2015); and articles in the journals Demokratizatsiya, East European Politics, Europe-Asia Studies, International Journal of Cultural Studies, Sport in Society and Problems of Post-Communism.

Nicolas Prevelakis is Assistant Director of Curricular Development at the Center for Hellenic Studies and Lecturer on Social Studies at Harvard University, USA. He has a PhD in Moral and Political Philosophy from the University of Paris-Sorbonne (Paris 4), France and a PhD in Political Sociology from Boston University, USA. He has published articles and encyclopedia pieces on religion and politics, secularization theory, nationalism, Islam in contemporary Europe, modern Greek nationalism and the conception of the self in Eastern Christianity. His research and teaching interests include the history of political philosophy, religion and politics, globalization and the European Union.

Chandler Rosenberger is Associate Professor of Sociology and International and Global Studies (IGS) at Brandeis University, USA, where he has also served as chair of the IGS programme for ten years. Rosenberger writes and teaches about the cultural foundations of politics, especially the sources of authoritarianism and dissent in communist and former communist societies. After studying philosophy and history at Dartmouth College, USA and Oxford University, UK, Rosenberger held a fellowship from the Institute of Current World Affairs (1992–94), which allowed him to travel across the former Soviet bloc writing about post-communist nationalism after the fall of the Berlin Wall. He then studied comparative and historical sociology at Boston University, USA under the supervision of Liah Greenfeld. Although he originally focused on Central Europe and the former Soviet Union, Rosenberger has recently begun to explore political culture in China.

Maxim Tabachnik grew up in Ufa, the capital of Russia’s Bashkortostan region. After Perestroika, his secondary school became a Political Science Gymnasium. He continued to study political science at Duke University, USA (an academic exchange with Science Po, Paris). After working in banking and PR in New York City, Maxim received an International MBA from York University in Toronto (an academic exchange with ESADE, Barcelona) and an MA in Political Science from Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona. His PhD research (University of California, Santa Cruz, 2017) addressed the politics of national identity and citizenship in the post-Soviet space. His article in Nations and Nationalism (2019) rewrites the history of nationalism by introducing the concept of territorial, as opposed to just ethnic/civic, nationalism. His article in Post-Soviet Affairs (2019) and his book, Citizenship, Territoriality, and Post-Soviet Nationhood (Palgrave Macmillan, 2019) apply this theoretical approach to an in-depth study of the politics of citizenship and national identity of the explosive ‘buffer zone’ countries with ‘frozen’ separatist conflicts between Russia and the West: Azerbaijan, Georgia and Moldova.

Chikako Takeishi is a Professor of Sociology in the Faculty of Commerce, Chuo University, Tokyo, Japan. At Chuo, she served as Vice-President for Internationalization, Education, and Quality Assurance, as well as Director of Chuo’s International Center (2014–18). As Director of the Organization for Common Education Initiatives, she administers Chuo’s inter-departmental educational programmes, which include programmes in English or in Chinese. Her academic interests lie in sociology of knowledge, social cause of mental illnesses, identity formation or malformation in the age of nationalism, and domestic violence and intimate partner violence. Before joining Chuo University, she worked at the Mitsubishi Research Institute, Inc., and then received a PhD in Sociology from Harvard University, USA (1999). Her methodological strength is statistics. In education, she encourages her students to take on active learning methods such as project-based learning in Tohoku areas in Japan, collaborative online international learning on the Sustainable Development Goals with Brandeis University (USA) students, or short-term internship abroad.

Metehan Tekinirk is a PhD candidate and senior teaching fellow at the Department of Political Science of Boston University, USA. He earned his bachelor’s degrees in Economics and International Relations from Koç University in Istanbul, Turkey in 2015. Tekinirk specializes in comparative politics and international relations. His main interests include nationalism and its relationship to populism, populism in power, party politics, hegemony, neo-liberalization and international relations theory. Tekinirk’s dissertation is about the relationship of nationalism, populism and democracy in modern Turkey. Specifically, his research focuses on the ways political actors reproduce populist discourses, performances and strategies in political competition, embed nationalist ideas and narratives in ways of political legitimation and domination, and how populism is institutionalized in political culture.

Veljko Vujačić is Professor of Sociology at Oberlin College, USA. From 2015 to 2019, he served as Provost and Professor of the European University at St. Petersburg, Russia. Professor Vujačić obtained his BA from Brandeis University (1985) and PhD from UC Berkeley (1995). A specialist in the comparative-historical and political sociology of nationalism and Russian and East European studies, he has authored many research and review articles, and two books: The Sociology of Nationalism (JP Službeni glasnik, 2013; in Serbian), and Nationalism, Myth, and the State in Russia and Serbia: Antecedents of the Dissolution of the Soviet Union and Yugoslavia (Cambridge University Press, 2015; Russian and Serbian translations, 2019). Professor Vujačić is the editor of Victor Zaslavsky, From the Neo-Stalinist State to Post-Soviet Russia (European University Press, 2019; in Russian). His current project deals with the relations among charisma, nationalism and tradition.

Zeying Wu is a PhD candidate in Political Science at Boston University (BU). Before joining BU, she received her education in mainland China, Hong Kong and Japan. She has worked at the United Nations Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (UN-ESCAP) in Bangkok, the Genron NPO in Tokyo and the Wen Wei Po newspaper in Hong Kong. Her current research focuses on the historical development of nationalism and political economy in China and Japan. She has published an article in Japan Studies Review and co-authored a chapter in The New Handbook of Political Sociology (Cambridge University Press, 2020). Her book review on Maarten Van Ginderachter’s, The Everyday Nationalism of Workers: A Social History of Modern Belgium is forthcoming in Political Science Quarterly. She is the co-editor of this book.

Richard Yarrow is a fellow at the Weatherhead Center for International Affairs at Harvard University, and was recently a Pforzheimer Fellow at the Harvard University Archives, USA. He graduated from Harvard University, where he studied modern intellectual history and received Harvard’s Sophia Freund Prize. His research focuses on the history and sociology of modern science in Germany, Britain, and the United States, and the history of twentieth century US–China relations. Yarrow has also worked and studied at think tanks across the US political spectrum including the Center for American Progress, Urban Institute, and American Enterprise Institute.

Guoxia Zu is a Professor at the School of Foreign Languages of Beijing Forestry University. She has published articles and a monograph on language, history and culture. She is also a translator of various books on nationalism. Her major research interests include modern intellectual history and American environmental history.

Geneviève Zubrzycki is Professor of Sociology and Faculty Associate at the Frankel Center for Judaic Studies at the University of Michigan, USA where she also directs the Weiser Center for Europe and Eurasia. She has written extensively on nationalism and religion, collective memory and national mythology, and the contested memory of the Holocaust in Eastern Europe. Her publications include the award-winning The Crosses of Auschwitz: Nationalism and Religion in Post-Communist Poland (University of Chicago Press, 2006) and Beheading the Saint: Nationalism, Religion and Secularism in Quebec (University of Chicago Press, 2016) as well as the volume National Matters: Nationalism, Culture and Materiality (Stanford University Press, 2017). She is completing a third monograph on the ongoing Jewish revival in Poland and non-Jewish Poles’ interest in all things Jewish, tentatively entitled Resurrecting the Jew: Antisemitism and Philosemitism in Contemporary Poland.