Contributors

M. Femi Ayadi is a Professor in the Healthcare Administration program, University of Houston–Clear Lake. Dr Ayadi holds a PhD in economics from Georgia State University. She previously worked at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, Atlanta Georgia. Dr Ayadi also helps train and mentor doctoral students from African Universities via the African Economic Research Consortium (AERC) platform. Dr Ayadi is a recipient of the Carnegie African Diaspora Program grant and is a Fulbright Scholar.

Neha Batura, PhD, is an Associate Professor at the University College London (UCL) Institute for Global Health (IGH). She holds a PhD in Economics (University of London) and an MSc in Economics for Development (University of Oxford). Her research interests lie in poverty and inequality; health and nutrition; economic evaluation of complex public health trials; and applied econometrics. She is the Course Director of UCL’s MSc Health Economics and Decision Science (2019–present), and Deputy Director of Education at the IGH (2020–present).

Simon Berthelot, MD, is an Assistant Professor in the department of family medicine and emergency medicine at the School of Medicine of Université Laval and a researcher at the Centre de recherche du CHU de Québec – Université Laval (CrCHUQc-UL). His research interests are mainly related to value-based care, overdiagnosis and overtreatment.

Tânia Maria Costa da Silva Beume, MSc, has had experience as a healthcare manager since 1985, and currently teaches Health Economics and Management in Healthcare for healthcare professionals in postgraduate programs in Brazil. Tânia is also an Analyst for Healthcare and Public Health Management at the Brazilian National Cancer Institute and a member of the International Health Economics Association (iHEA), American Economic Association (AEA), German Society for Quality in Healthcare and Patient Safety (GQMG).

Heather Brown is a Senior Lecturer in Health Economics at Newcastle University, UK. She has developed an e-learning module in Health Economics for an MSc in Oncology and Palliative Care. She is actively involved in the teaching community in Newcastle, helping to promote the use of new technology in teaching. She is one of the convenors of the Teaching Health Economics Group, which is a special interest group for the International Health Economics Association (IHEA).

Florian Buchner studied mathematics at the University of Augsburg. After working for a health insurance company, he earned a master’s degree in Public Health at Munich Ludwig-Maximilians-University and a Doctorate at the University of Greifswald. Since 2007, he has been Professor of Health Economics at Carinthia University of Applied Sciences (Austria) and received in 2014 the Austrian State Prize for Teaching Excellence ‘Ars docendi’. His research focuses on health insurance and risk adjustment, and he actively participates in the Teaching Health Economics activities of iHEA.
Susan Cleary is an Associate Professor at the Health Economics Unit in the School of Public Health and Family Medicine, University of Cape Town, South Africa. She has a master’s in Economics and a PhD in Health Economics from the University of Cape Town and a Bachelor of Arts in English and Economics from Rhodes University, South Africa. She convenes the Postgraduate Diploma in Health Economics and the PhD Programme in Public Health at the University of Cape Town.

Simon Condliffe, PhD, is a Professor in the Department of Economics and Finance in the College of Business and Public Management at West Chester University, Pennsylvania. He teaches health care economics at both the undergraduate and graduate level along with microeconomics, statistics and research methods. His research includes the topics of the income gradient, health care expenditures, prescription drugs and the labour supply of registered nurses.

Carolyn S. Dewa, MPH, PhD, is a Professor in the Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences and the Department of Public Health Sciences at UC Davis. She is a graduate of Wellesley College. She holds a PhD in Health Economics from the Johns Hopkins University School of Hygiene and Public Health and an MPH from San Diego State University School of Public Health. She was a fellow at the Harvard Medical School Department of Health Policy and Management.

Diane M. Dewar, PhD, is an Associate Professor at the University at Albany, State University of New York. She has over 25 years of teaching experience that includes graduate courses in health economics and health policy and undergraduate courses in microeconomics, macroeconomics, and health economics. She lived in Canada, and has delivered courses in Costa Rica, Colombia, South Korea and Vietnam. Her research includes five books as sole author or co-author in the areas of health economics, health reform, and community health.

Lisa Gold is an Associate Professor at Deakin University, Melbourne, Australia, where she leads research in the economics of maternal and child health at Deakin Health Economics. As an economist, her research on the economic evaluation of health and social interventions aims to improve population health and reduce health inequalities for children and their families. Lisa leads Deakin’s health economics teaching program, including Masters and Postgraduate Certificate courses and input into undergraduate and postgraduate courses across the Faculty of Health.

Allen C. Goodman received his BA from the University of Michigan (1969) and his PhD from Yale University (1976). He serves as Professor of Economics at Wayne State University, Director of Graduate Studies, and is former Department Chair. He has published over 80 articles and four books. He has been active in health economics education for over 30 years, and he co-authors the leading health economics text, The Economics of Health and Health Care, now in its eighth edition.

Hassan Haghparsast-Bidgoli, PhD, is a Principal Research Fellow at the University College London (UCL) Institute for Global Health. He holds a PhD in Health Economics (Karolinska Institute) and MSc in Health Economics (Iran University of Medical Science). His primary area of work is in analysis of inequalities in health and access and utilization of health care, and the economic evaluation of health care interventions.
Jill Boylston Herndon, PhD, is managing member and principal consultant with Key Analytics and Consulting. Her expertise includes healthcare research, policy analysis, and program evaluation. She works with non-profit and for-profit organizations, government agencies, and academic institutions. Dr. Herndon has led the development and implementation of healthcare economics and policy curricula in colleges of liberal arts, business, and medicine. Most recently, she has served as course director of health outcomes and policy at the University of Florida College of Medicine.

Jeffrey S. Hoch, PhD, is a Professor and Chief of the Division of Health Policy and Management in the Department of Public Health Sciences and the Associate Director of the Center for Healthcare Policy and Research at the University of California at Davis. Professor Hoch teaches courses in health economics and researches value in health care. He received his PhD in Health Economics from the Johns Hopkins School of Public Health.

Ashley Hodgson is an Associate Professor of Economics at St Olaf College, Northfield, Minnesota, where she has taught courses in health care economics, behavioral economics, microeconomic theory, blockchain economics, public health, principles of economics and game theory. Her research focuses on hospitals, multiple chronic condition patients, and the economics of care coordination. She also has an educational YouTube channel with many videos explaining economic concepts.

Michal Horný is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Radiology and Imaging Sciences at Emory University School of Medicine. He is also affiliated with the Department of Health Policy and Management at Emory University Rollins School of Public Health, and the Health Economics and Analytics Lab at Georgia Institute of Technology. He received a master’s degree in stochastics from VU University Amsterdam, and a PhD in health services research from Boston University School of Public Health.

Jane Hughes, PhD, is an academic developer and higher education researcher with a particular interest in technology-enhanced learning and online communication. She has led a higher education consultancy, she collaborates on research and development projects with a number of UK universities. Prior to this, she was a lecturer in learning technologies at University College London.

Jennifer Kohn was an Associate Professor of Economics at Drew University until January 2020. Currently, Jennifer runs the Little Otter Flower Farm in Bedford VA, a local sustainable farm that works with people on the autistic spectrum. Previously, Jennifer was the Senior Administrator of the Division of Cardiology at New York Presbyterian Hospital – Cornell campus. Jennifer has degrees in political philosophy (BA, UMASS Amherst), finance and statistics (MBA, New York University) and finance and economics (PhD, Rutgers University).

Maude Laberge, PhD, is an Associate Professor in the Department of Operations and Decision Systems at Université Laval. She is also a researcher at the Centre de recherche du CHU de Québec – Université Laval (CrCHUQc-UL) and at Vitam, centre de recherche en santé durable-Université Laval. Her research focuses on measuring the performance of health systems. She obtained her PhD in health services research from the University of Toronto.
Mercedes Alfaro Latorre holds a master’s degree in Public Administration from the National School of Public Health, Madrid, Spain, and is Sub-director of Health Information.

Ruth Litmanovich is Senior Auditor at the Superintendence of Health Insurance, Argentina. She holds a master’s degree in Health Economics and Management from the Universidad Isalud, Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Neil Meredith is an Associate Professor of Economics and Dana Professor of Business at West Texas A&M University, where he joined the faculty in 2011. He received a PhD in Economics from the University of Georgia in 2011 and a BA in Economics/Mathematics from Indiana University of Pennsylvania in 2006. Neil has taught courses on microeconomic theory, economics of health care, international economics, and principles of microeconomics. He is also a member of the American Society of Health Economists.

Justice Nonvignon is Associate Professor in Health Economics and Policy at the School of Public Health, University of Ghana, Accra. He has a PhD in Public Health Economics from the University of Ghana, a master’s degree in economics from University of Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, and a bachelor’s degree in economics from University of Cape Coast, Ghana. He currently chairs the Global Evaluation and Monitoring Network for Health, a global network of institutions advancing the monitoring and evaluation capacity, research and technical assistance to countries.

Maia Platt is an Associate Professor of Health Services Administration (HSA) in the University of Detroit Mercy, Detroit, Michigan, where she is also a Program Director for undergraduate and graduate HSA programs. She holds PhD and MA degrees in Health Economics from Wayne State University, and teaches graduate and undergraduate Health Economics courses. Her areas of research, publications and presentations focus on exploring the value of HE education for students in health professions.

Elizabeth Pitney Seidler is an Associate Professor of Economics at Regis College in Weston, Massachusetts. She received a bachelor’s degree in Mathematics and Economics at Smith College, an MBA at Babson College, and earned her doctorate in Health Economics at Clark University. She has been affiliated with the Teaching Health Economics (THE) Special Interest Group since its inception and has presented at several iHEA preconference THE sessions. Dr Seidler lives in central Massachusetts.

Thomas Poder, PhD, is an Assistant Professor at the School of Public Health of Université de Montréal and an Associated Professor at the Department of Economics at the Université de Sherbrooke. He is also a researcher with the Centre de recherche de l’Institut universitaire en santé mentale de Montréal. His research focuses on measurement of patients’ quality of life. He holds a PhD in Economics with a specialization in cost–benefit analyses.

Annie Poirier, MSc, is a patient–partner with the Québec SUPPORT Unit. As a patient–partner, she has been involved in multiple research projects. She is also a research assistant at the Centre de recherche du CHU de Québec – Université Laval (CtCHUQc-UL), in the thematic axis ‘Population health and optimal practices in health’. She holds a master’s degree in Public Health from Université Laval.
Noemi Savoia is Director of Red Laboratory, Universidad Isalud, Buenos Aires, Argentina. She holds a master’s degree in Health Economics and Management from Universidad Isalud, Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Arturo Schweiger is a director of the master’s course in Health Economics and Management in the Universidad Isalud, Buenos Aires, Argentina, since 2000. Founder and member of the Latin-American Health Economic Association; coordinator of auditing of international loans at the Auditoria de General de la Nacion. He holds a Master of Arts in Economic Policy from Boston University and is a Fulbright Scholar.

Jolene Skordis, PhD, is a Professor of Health and Development Economics at the University College London (UCL) Institute for Global Health. She trained in economics and demography at the University of Cape Town and holds a PhD in Economics (London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine). Her research extends to improving priority setting in health spending, economic evaluation, and understanding barriers to behaviour change. She was the Course Director of UCL’s MSc Health Economics and Decision Science from 2017 to 2019.

Erin Strumpf, PhD is an Associate Professor in the Department of Economics and at the Department of Epidemiology, Biostatistics and Occupational Health at McGill University. Her research in health economics focuses on measuring the impacts of health policies and clinical interventions. She obtained her PhD in Health Policy from Harvard University.

Jennifer Watts is a Professor and Head of School of Health and Social Development at Deakin University, Melbourne, Australia, where she leads research in the economics of chronic disease and hospital care at Deakin Health Economics. Her research emphasizes policy-important questions that can be translated to the delivery of efficient healthcare programs for people with chronic disease, including hospital costing, efficiency and productivity measurement, the impact of ageing on hospital costs and public hospital funding. Jenny was the Foundation Course Director of Deakin’s Master of Health Economics program.

Thomas Wilkinson is a Senior Research Officer at the Health Economics Unit in the School of Public Health and Family Medicine, University of Cape Town, South Africa. He has a master’s in Health Economics from the University of York, England and a Bachelor of Pharmacy from the University of Otago, New Zealand. He is a module coordinator and senior lecturer on the Master of Public Health (Health Economics specialization) program at the University of Cape Town.

Maria Clara Zerbino is Director of Financing Strategies at the Ministry of Health, Argentina. She holds Master of Arts in Health Economics from the University of Bologna, Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Hervé Tchala Vignon Zomahoun, PhD, Université Laval is the research coordinator of the Health and Social Services Systems Research, Knowledge Translation and Implementation component of the Québec SUPPORT Unit. He also coordinates the French-speaking activities of Cochrane Canada. He is an expert in meta-analyses, observational studies, and advanced statistics.