Contributors

Duygu Acar Erdur is an assistant professor at the Department of Business Administration at Beykent University, İstanbul, Turkey. She holds a PhD in management and organization from Uludag University in Bursa, Turkey. Her thesis analysed the diffusion of diversity management through multinational companies. Her main research interests include context-sensitive perspectives on diversity, equality and inclusion.

Asma Ait Bounssiyal is a PhD researcher in Cadi Ayyad University in Marrakesh, Morocco, affiliated to the Interdisciplinary Laboratory for Research in Organizational Management and Corporate Law (LIRE-MD). Her research interests are focused on diversity and gender studies. She is conducting a doctoral thesis on women’s career path. During her academic journey, she has participated in many international conferences (for example, RISM, EDI), published two articles and given classes in management at the university.

Francisca Álvarez-Figueroa is currently a PhD researcher for the programme in Development Policy and Management, in the Global Development Institute at the University of Manchester, UK. She is also a graduate teaching assistant at the same university, participating in modules of development research, gender and international development. Her research focuses on international development, diversity management and educational management for citizenship and inclusion.

Almina Bešić is an assistant professor in the Department of International Management at Johannes Kepler University (JKU) Linz, Austria. She is also a consultant on migration and integration for the European Migration Network, and a visiting lecturer at the UniforLife of the University of Graz, Austria. She holds a PhD in Economics and Social Sciences from the University of Graz. Her main research interests are workforce integration of migrants, migration policy, international HRM with a focus on transition economies, diversity and gender equality at work, as well as the impact of disruptions on businesses in transition economies. Almina has gained research and work experience in different countries, including Austria, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Belgium and the United Kingdom.

Nasima M. H. Carrim is an associate professor in the Department of Human Resource Management at the University of Pretoria. Her research focuses on gender in management, culture, religion and minorities in the workplace from an intersectionality and identity perspective. She has authored many articles in international as well as South African journals related to the challenges that minorities face in the workplace, workplace gossip and on women and male leaders. She has also authored chapters in international books related to diversity management challenges. She serves on the editorial board for the South African Journal of Industrial Psychology (SAJIP).

Shreyashi Chakraborty is an assistant professor in XLRI-Xavier School of Management in the area of organizational behaviour. She is a Fellow in Program Management of the Indian Institute of Management, Calcutta. Her primary research interests are diversity management practices in Indian workplaces, sexual harassment and the career experiences of women employees.

Harinder Chhina, a military veteran, is a contract instructor at the Sprott School of Business at Carleton University, Ottawa, Canada. Dr Chhina has a Doctorate in Management, a Masters in Defence Studies and a Master’s in Management. His research focus is multidisciplinary, with a focus on leadership that ties in with acculturation and diversity at a small group level. Dr Chhina has presented at multiple international conferences. He has also published on military leadership in a peer-reviewed journal.

Daniel A. Díaz is currently carrying out academic activities at the University of Manchester, the Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile and the Universidad Adolfo Ibañez. He has developed research, teaching and consulting on corporate governance, leadership and organizational behaviour for the public sector, private companies and non-profit organizations. He holds a PhD in Development Policy and Management, a MSc in Community and Social Psychology and a MSc in Organizational Change and Development.

Isis Gutiérrez-Martínez is a professor in the Department of Business Administration at Universidad de las Américas Puebla in Mexico. She is a member of the Mexican National Research System. Her research interests focus on human resource management, diversity management and information technology management. Her research has been published in various prestigious editorial books and leading journals such as the International Journal of Human Resource Management and Government Information Quarterly. Her work has been funded by several grants including CONACYT-Mexico and AECID-Spain.

Christian Hirt holds the position of a senior lecturer at the Institute of Human Resource Management at the University of Graz, Austria. His teaching focuses on personnel development, strategic human resource management, and general and cross-cultural management. As the Coordinator for International Relations at the School of Business Economics and Social Sciences he has extensive teaching experience abroad. His main research includes publications on international human resource management with a focus on South-Eastern Europe, diversity and careers.

Amit Jain is an assistant professor at the SP Jain Institute of Management and Research, Mumbai, in the area of People and Performance. He received his doctorate from the Indian Institute of Management, Calcutta. His primary research interests are workforce diversity, with specific reference to persons with disabilities, unconscious biases and behavioral ethics.

Charlotte M. Karam is a tenured associate professor at the Telfer School of Management, where she holds the Endowed Professorship in Inclusive Human Resource Systems. She is also an adjunct professor at the Olayan School of Business, American University of Beirut, where she was the founding director of, and continues to co-lead, regional projects based in the Center of Inclusive Business and Leadership (CIBL). Charlotte’s work as a scholar-activist contributes to overlapping conversations in HR, business ethics, public policy and feminist praxis, most recently through The KIP Index and The SAWI Project and as the Area Editor at the Journal of Business Ethics within the section for Feminisms and Business Ethics.

Avi Kay is an associate professor in the Department of Business Management at the Jerusalem College of Technology. A psychologist by training, he has been engaged in the development of academic programmes for under-represented populations in Israel. His research focuses on matters including religion and spirituality in the workplace, the impact of technology in the workplace and business ethics. In the framework of the latter, he is the author of the first book in Hebrew addressing the formulation and implementation of ethical codes.

Alain Klarsfeld is senior professor at TBS Business School, Toulouse, France. He has been doing research on skill-based management, corporate social responsibility, international human resource management, and equality, diversity and inclusion. He co-founded the competence management SIG (Special Interest Group) and the equality-diversity SIG within the French-speaking HR society (AGRH) and has published extensively in both of these fields in French and international journals. In 2003 Alain founded and managed his institution’s specialized Master’s in Human Resource Management (from 2003–2015). From 2012–2016, and since September 2020, he has also served as Department Chair (HR and Business Law Department). His present research includes talent management, gendered careers, the gender pay gap, comparative equality and diversity management, the management of religious diversity, diversity climate, and remote work.

Lena Knappert is an assistant professor in the Department of Management and Organisation at Vrije Universiteit (VU) Amsterdam (the Netherlands). She holds a PhD in International Human Resource Management from ESCP Europe (Berlin, Germany). Her main research interests are context-sensitive and comparative perspectives on HRM, diversity, and inclusion. Her research has been funded by the European Association of Work and Organizational Psychology, the German Academic Exchange service, and the German Research Foundation. She also serves as a Global Ambassador for the Gender and Diversity in Organizations division of the Academy of Management.

Angela Kornau is a postdoctoral researcher at the Chair of Human Resource Management at Helmut Schmidt University (Hamburg, Germany). She holds a PhD in International Human Resource Management from ESCP Europe (Berlin, Germany). Her research is concerned with context-sensitive, multi-actor perspectives on equality, diversity and inclusion in different organizational and national contexts with a special emphasis on gender and migration. Her research has been funded by the German Research Foundation (DFG), the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD) and the Böttcher Foundation. She has gained research and work experience in China, Turkey and Mexico.

Yee Han Kuan is a senior lecturer and residential fellow at Tembusu College, National University of Singapore. His teaching interests are negotiation and ageing. He brings together complementary pedagogies of experiential learning and authentic learning in his role as an educator. He also co-facilitates negotiation workshops and co-trains student coaches in promoting out-of-classroom learning. Yee Han is a certified LEGO® SERIOUS PLAY® facilitator where he conducts customized workshops with different organizations.

Angeline Cuifang Lim is a lecturer in the Chua Thian Poh Community Leadership Centre at the National University of Singapore, where she teaches diversity and inclusion, community leadership, and research methods. Her research focuses on diversity and inclusion, human capital management and development, and interpersonal relationships and affect. Her work has been funded by TAFEP, Agency for Integrated Care ILTC Research Grant, and the Humanities and Social Sciences Research Fund, and has been published for both academic and practitioner audiences.

Leon Moolman is a senior lecturer in labour relations management in the Faculty of Economic and Management Sciences (School of Industrial Psychology and Human Resource Management) at North-West University, South Africa. He specializes in diversity management and applied and advanced labour relations management.

Eddy S. Ng is the Smith Professor of Equity and Inclusion in Business at Queen’s University, Canada. Previously, he was the James and Elizabeth Freeman Professor at Bucknell University, and the F. C. Manning Chair in Economics and Business at Dalhousie University. His research focuses on managing diversity for organizational competitiveness, the future of work and managing across generations. His work has been funded by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada grants. He is the Editor-in-Chief of Equality, Diversity and Inclusion and an associate editor of Personnel Review. He is also the Program Chair for the Gender and Diversity in Organizations division of the Academy of Management.

Faith W. Ngunjiri is Associate Professor of Ethics at Concordia College, Minnesota, where she also serves as Director of the Lorentzsen Center for Faith and Work. Her research interests revolve around women and leadership, particularly studies on African women, servant leadership, spirituality, and the nexus between culture and leadership. She also teaches and writes about culturally responsive research approaches. Her second area of research is spirituality in the workplace. She is also very interested in qualitative research approaches, particularly autoethnography.

Miguel R. Olivas-Luján is a professor and former chair of Pennsylvania Western University’s (known as Clarion until June 2022) Management & Marketing department. His research includes Diversity, Innovation, Information Technology, Human Resources, Evidence-based Management, Bullying, and Culture. Miguel has published more than one hundred articles in both scholarly and practitioner outlets and serves as Senior Editor for the Advanced Series in Management. Former Management Education and Development (MED) division chair for the Academy of Management (AOM), he has served organizations such as the Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM, in its Global HR Expert Panel) and PennState’s Centre for International Human Resource Studies (CIHRS, as Associate Director). Besides Pennsylvanian, he has taught in Argentinean, Canadian, Dutch, German, Mexican, Polish, and Spanish universities.

Renate Ortlieb is Professor of Human Resource Management and Head of the Institute of Human Resource Management at the University of Graz, Austria. Her research interests include labour market integration of refugees, migrant/ethnic minority workers, the consequences of the COVID-19 pandemic for business firms and workers, gender and diversity, working conditions in academia, and working time regimes. Renate served as Chair of the Human Resource Management section of the German Academic Association for Business Research and as Co-Editor-in-Chief of the German Journal of Human Resource Management.

Juan Pablo Queupi is a researcher and faculty member in the Graduate School of the Faculty of Education at the Catholic University Cardinal Raúl Silva Henríquez in Chile. He is also the current Director of the Research Center for Socio-Educational Transformation. His research focuses on educational management, leadership, policies and networking. His research has been published in several journals and books, receiving important funding by different grants. He holds a PhD in Education with an emphasis on educational leadership and comparative international education.

Zijada Rahimić is a professor of management and organization and Head of the Department of Management and Organization at the School of Economics and Business, University of Sarajevo (Bosnia and Herzegovina). In addition to her professional academic experience, she is active as a national and international consultant in human resource management. Her main research interests include human resource management with a specific focus on talent management, development of soft skills and employee engagement; gender equality in organizations; diversity management; and the impact of crises on organizations and their employees. Zijada has published several research articles in the fields of human resource management, strategic management and diversity management. She has been a visiting scholar in universities in Austria, Croatia, Germany, Italy and Romania.

Jefferson Karthikeyan Rajah is a graduate student in system dynamics at the University of Bergen, Norway. He holds a BA (Honours) in Global Studies and Political Science from the National University of Singapore. Prior to his postgraduate studies, he was the Research & Advocacy Executive at Action for AIDS Singapore, Singapore’s leading independent organization of HIV experts. His research areas include the inclusion of marginalized communities, community development, collective action, and systems thinking and dynamics of social systems.

Astrid Reichel is a full professor and Head of the Human Resource Management Group at the University of Salzburg, Austria. Previously she worked as an associate professor at WU Vienna. She earned her PhD in Social and Economic Sciences from the University of Vienna. Her research focuses on macro questions of human resource management, such as power and organization of HRM (departments), and on micro HRM, especially human-computer-interaction and creativity support systems.

Doha Sahraoui Bentaleb is a professor in management sciences at Cadi Ayyad University, Marrakesh, Morocco, Co-Director of the Interdisciplinary Laboratory for Research and Studies in Organizational Management and Corporate Law (Lire-MD) and Vice President in charge of diversity at the Moroccan Institute of Social Auditing. Her research work focuses on gender and women's careers. She has participated in several projects dealing with women and the glass ceiling in Moroccan companies and has contributed to several collective works and numerous academic and professional journals. She is also an evaluating member for many scientific committees of Moroccan and international journals.

Samina M. Saifuddin is an assistant professor of management in the Department of Business Administration, Earl G. Graves School of Business and Management, Morgan State University, Maryland. Dr Saifuddin's research integrates insights from areas of gender, diversity, careers, networking behaviour, leadership and entrepreneurship. Issues related to gender and careers are paramount to her research orientation. Dr Saifuddin's research has been published in academic journals including Equality, Diversity and Inclusion: An International Journal, Organization Management Journal, Gender in Management: An International Journal, and International Journal of Gender, Science and Technology.
Caren Brenda Scheepers is an associate professor at the Gordon Institute of Business Science, University of Pretoria, South Africa. She teaches strategic leadership, diversity and inclusion, organizational behaviour, and contextual leadership intelligence. She has published more than 40 teaching cases. She publishes in international journals and has authored several book chapters in books on coaching and leadership.

Isabella Scheibmayr is a researcher at the Human Resource Management Group at the University of Salzburg, Austria. She earned a PhD in Economic Sciences from the University of Salzburg; her thesis analysed the entanglement of gender and human resource management as a function and an occupation. Her research interests include the entanglement of gender demography and status of occupations, especially HRM, and the relationship between HRM practices and gender equality.

Julian Wei Meng Sng is a political science undergraduate at the National University of Singapore. He has a keen interest in discourses surrounding social justice, sustainability and labour relations. Beyond his contributions to his college's gender and sexuality inclusion efforts, he has undertaken several internship roles in various non-profit and community-facing organizations that seek to address social inequalities in Singapore.

Laila Zaman is an assistant professor in the Department of Business Administration, East-West University, Dhaka, Bangladesh. She obtained her BBA and MBA from the same university. Ms Zaman's research publications are in the area of management and human resources management. Currently, she is working on mentoring. She has published and presented papers in different national and international journals and conferences. She has been awarded numerous merit scholarships for academic achievement.