Contributors

Linda Åhäll is Lecturer in International Relations at Keele University, UK. Her research interests include feminist security studies, the politics of emotions, and popular culture and world politics. She is the author of Sexing War/Policing Gender (2015), co-editor of Emotions, Politics and War (2015) and Gender, Agency and Political Violence (2012) and has published articles in journals such as Security Dialogue, International Feminist Journal of Politics and Critical Studies on Security.

Mayesha Alam is Associate Director of the Georgetown Institute for Women, Peace and Security and teaches in the School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University. Alam is the author of Women and Transitional Justice: Progress and Persistent Challenges (2014). She is a Visiting Research Fellow at the University of Cambridge’s Centre for Science and Policy and previously worked for The World Bank, the United Nations and several NGOs.

Victoria M. Basham is a Senior Lecturer in Politics at Cardiff University. She researches feminist approaches to militaries, militarism and militarization. She edits Critical Military Studies and is the author of War, Identity and the Liberal State: Everyday Experiences of the Geopolitical in the Armed Forces (2013).

Soumita Basu is Assistant Professor of International Relations at the South Asian University, New Delhi. Her primary research interests are the United Nations, feminist international relations and critical security studies. She is an Associate Editor of the International Feminist Journal of Politics.

Dan Berkowitz is a Professor in the School of Journalism and Mass Communication at the University of Iowa. Berkowitz earned his PhD in 1988 from Indiana University. His research interests are in social and cultural approaches to the study of news, including news of terrorism, collective memory, boundary work and mythical narrative. His publications include the edited volumes Social Meanings of News and Cultural Meanings of News.

Jodi Burkett is Principal Lecturer in History at the University of Portsmouth. Her research focuses on the cultural and social impacts of the end of the British Empire, in particular on changing perceptions of British national identity, as well as racism and anti-racism in British society and culture. She is the author of Constructing Post-Imperial Britain: Britishness, ‘Race’ and the Radical Left in the 1960s (2013). She has published in European Review of History, The British Journal for the History of Science and Twentieth Century British History.

Jennifer Chan holds a PhD in International Comparative Education from Stanford University. Her research interests include international human rights law and social movements, antiracism and multiculturalism, gender, global health governance, the global justice movement, comparative education, and Japanese society and culture. She is the author of Politics in the Corridor of Dying: AIDS Activism and Global Health Governance (2015) and Gender and Human Rights Politics in Japan: Global Norms and Domestic Networks (2004), as well as the editor of Another Japan is Possible: New Social Movements and Global Citizenship Education (2008).

Myriam Denov holds the Canada Research Chair in Youth, Gender and Armed Conflict at McGill University. Her research and teaching interests lie in the areas of children and youth in adversity, and international child protection, with an emphasis on war and political violence, children in armed conflict, and gender-based violence. She is the author of Child Soldiers: Sierra Leone’s Revolutionary United Front (2010).

Ilene R. Feinman is Professor of Democratic Cultures and Dean of Arts, Humanities, and Social Sciences at CSU Monterey Bay. Her book, Citizenship Rites: Feminist Soldiers and Feminist Antimilitarists (2000) was noted in The Chronicle of Higher Education as groundbreaking work on women, the US military, and militarism in the context of international relations. She has also published in collections and has been interviewed by NPR, The Washington Post and Air America regarding Abu Ghraib.

Lindsey Feitz is an Assistant Teaching Professor in Gender and Women’s Studies at the University of Denver. She received her PhD in American Studies from the University of Kansas where she studied the intersections of US consumer culture, globalization, and US militarism. She has published works on the beauty industry, gender-based violence, and war. Her current book project, The Approachable Feminist, outlines the basic tenets of feminism and its impact on celebrity culture, social media and contemporary social justice movements.

Caron E. Gentry is a Lecturer in the School of International Relations at the University of St Andrews. Her most recent publication is (with Laura Sjoberg) Beyond Mothers, Monsters, Whores: Thinking About Women’s Violence in Global Politics (2015).

Amber Green holds an MSW from McGill University where she conducted research on topics including critical perspectives on women’s mental health as well as gendered violence and maternal wellbeing in the context of war. Currently, she is working on a research project led by Myriam Denov on children born of wartime sexual violence in northern Uganda, funded by the Trudeau Foundation.

Caitlin Hamilton is a doctoral researcher and a research assistant at UNSW Australia. She is the Managing Editor of the Australian Journal of International Affairs. Her primary areas of research are gender and peacebuilding, and the intersection of popular culture and world politics.

Paul Higate is Reader in Gender and Security at the School for Sociology, Politics and International Studies at the University of Bristol. He has written on the gendered culture of the military and militarization with a focus on masculinity in a number of contexts. His current project focuses on those who travel to fight for or against groups such as Islamic State in Syria and Iraq. He is a former Ministry of Defence and Economic Social Research Council Fellow.

Christopher Hills is a final year PhD candidate at the University of Sydney. He currently lectures on the Gendered Politics of War at Australian National University and on Gender, Security and Human Rights at Sydney University. For several years he worked for NGOs in East and West Africa. His research focus is the intersection of post-conflict peacebuilding and African feminism(s).

Alison Howell is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Rutgers University – Newark, where she is also an affiliate member of Women’s and Gender Studies. She is a Founding Editor of Critical Military Studies and an editorial board member of Critical Studies on Security. Her research examines the international relations of medicine, health, security and warfare. She is the author of Madness in International Relations: Psychology, Security and the Global Governance of Mental Health (2011).

Joyce P. Jacobsen is Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs and Andrews Professor of Economics at Wesleyan University. She has published mainly in the area of gender and labor economics, including articles on sex segregation, migration, and the effects of labor force intermittency on women’s earnings. She is the author of The Economics
Tania Kaiser is Senior Lecturer in Forced Migration Studies in the Department of Development Studies, University of London. Her research interests are in forced migration and refugee experiences, violence, conflict, gender and generation, and in culture, aesthetics and social change. She has published articles in journals including the Journal of Refugee Studies, Mobilities and the Journal of East African Studies. She holds a DPhil in anthropology from the University of Oxford.

Qi Ling is a doctoral student in the School of Journalism and Mass Communication at the University of Iowa. Her research focuses on feminist media studies, popular culture and television studies. Her dissertation deals with the television industry and the women-focused drama series in post-socialist China.

Megan MacKenzie is a leading expert on gender, post-conflict reconstruction, security and women in combat and the author of Beyond the Band of Brothers: the US Military and the Myth that Women Can’t Fight (2015). Megan is Senior Lecturer of Government and International Relations at the University of Sydney, Australia and a former post-doctoral fellow with the Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs and the Women and Public Policy Program at Harvard University.

Mary Manjikian is Associate Dean at the Robertson School of Government at Regent University in Virginia Beach, Virginia. A former Fulbright scholar and former United States foreign service officer, she is the author of three books on national security. Her work has appeared in International Feminist Journal of Politics, International Studies Quarterly, International Journal of Intelligence and Counterintelligence and Intelligence and National Security.

Catherine O’Rourke is Senior Lecturer in Human Rights and International Law and Gender Research Coordinator at the Transitional Justice Institute, Ulster University, Northern Ireland. She is author of Gender Politics in Transitional Justice (2013) and has an ongoing role in gender and conflict research and policy-making for the United Nations, the British and Irish governments, and for a number of non-governmental organizations.

Juliette Pattinson is a Reader in History at the University of Kent. She is a socio-cultural historian with particular interests in gender, war and personal testimonies. She has published on special operations, the French Resistance, gendered experiences of warfare, cultural memory, Britishness and oral history methodology. She is currently completing a co-authored book with Arthur McIvor and Linsey Robb about civilian men on the home front, entitled Men in Reserve.

Jennifer Pedersen holds a PhD in International Politics from Aberystwyth University in Wales, where her work focused on women’s peace movements. She has worked in gender, peacebuilding and international development in several countries, and has published in International Feminist Journal of Politics, Gender and Development and the Journal for the Association of Research and Mothering. She currently works in politics in Ottawa, Canada, with a focus on Canadian foreign policy.

Alexandra Ricard-Guay is Research Associate at the European University Institute. She holds a PhD in Social Work from McGill University. Her thesis examined sexual exploitation of adolescent girls. Her research areas include human trafficking, gender-based violence, gender and irregular migration, gender and war. She is currently the main researcher of the study on ‘Trafficking in human beings in the domestic work sector’, conducted in seven European countries (part of DemandAT).

Cami Rowe is a Lecturer in Theatre and Performance Theory at Goldsmiths, University of London. She has pioneered the application of theatre and performance studies to the discipline of International Relations. Her research focuses on the theatricality of international politics, with an emphasis on performative acts of resistance by marginalized actors. She is the author of The Politics of Protest and US Foreign Policy: Performative Construction of the War on Terror (2013).

Simona Sharoni is Professor of Gender and Women’s Studies at the State University of New York in Plattsburgh. She is the author of Gender and The Israeli–Palestinian Conflict: The Politics of Women’s Resistance and numerous other publications. Sharoni serves on the editorial board of the International Feminist Journal of Politics.

Laura J. Shepherd is Associate Professor of International Relations at UNSW Australia. She is author/editor of five books, including Gender

Laura Sjoberg is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Florida. Her work in gender and international security has been published in dozens of journals and books in international relations, gender studies, geography and law. She currently serves as the homebase Editor of the International Feminist Journal of Politics, co-editor of International Studies Review and Vice President of the International Studies Association.

Linda Steiner is a Professor in the College of Journalism at the University of Maryland. Her co-authored books include Women and Journalism (2004); her co-edited books include the Routledge Companion to Media and Gender (2013) and Key Concepts in Critical-Cultural Studies (2010). She is editor of Journalism & Communication Monographs and has published 100 book chapters and journal articles.

Julia Welland is based in the Politics and International Studies Department at the University of Warwick. Her PhD focused on the masculinity required for contemporary counterinsurgency campaigns in Iraq and Afghanistan, and she is in the process of completing a book on this same topic. She has work published in Review of International Studies and International Feminist Journal of Politics and continues to research on gender, militarism and violence.

Zoë H. Wool is Assistant Professor in the Department of Anthropology at Rice University and author of After War: The Weight of Life at Walter Reed (2015).