Acknowledgments

This Handbook was conceived by Jennifer Mathers, who is Reader and Head of Department of International Politics at Aberystwyth University. She created a table of contents and contacted many of the authors. We thank both Jennifer Mathers for initiating the project and Rachel Vaughan, also at Aberystwyth University, who provided administrative support in the early stages of the project.

When unforeseen circumstances prevented the original editor from bringing the project to fruition, the four of us stepped in. We had not worked together before and in fact did not know one another prior to this work. Although we have all juggled multiple responsibilities over the past year, the Handbook became a priority. Our collaborative process was fueled by a desire to complete the manuscript in a timely manner. We updated the table of Contents and asked authors for updated chapters that reflect contemporary scholarship and debates on gender and war as they related to their topic. We also added several authors in an effort to reflect diverse perspectives from different parts of the world.

We would not have been able to meet this objective without the patience, dedication and flexibility of the Handbook contributors. We thank those who have been involved with the project since its inception for their trust and support. Special thanks to the new authors we invited; they worked under very tight deadlines.

We are grateful to Alan Sturmer, Victoria Raven and Alex Pettifer of Edward Elgar Publishing for their commitment to the project and their ongoing assistance and support during the transition between editors. We hope that the Handbook will become a useful resource to those interested in the gendered aspect of war and its aftermath.
